Repeal Group Again Fails to Limit Debate By Senators

Sen. Minton Attacks Nye; Administration Hopes for Victory Within Two Weeks

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer.

Administration efforts to limit Senate neutrality debate collapsed again last night, but leaders drove forward with plans to pass the measure through the Senate late this week and wind up all Congressional business in a fortnight.

A bitter personal attack on Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, by the Senate's majority whip, Sherman Minton, climaxed yesterday's isolationist blockade of a debate limitation agreement.

Nye, whose charges that the munitions industry would chiefly profit from repeal of the arms embargo were renewed in another Senate speech, was accused by Minton with "making more money out of his investment in munitions than duPont." Minton said he referred to Nye's lectures on munitions "at so much per."

Leaders Attack Senator Nye

Other Administration leaders joined in the verbal castigation of Nye, after Minton charged the North Dakota Republican with seeking to aid the Spanish Nationalists by repealing the embargo on arms to Spain, but now vigorously opposing repeal of the ban on war shipments to European belligerents, because "it's their war."

"He's been on every hide of the embargo question since it has been before the Senate," declared the Democratic whip.

The hot exchange of personalities carried the Senate nearly two hours beyond its usual recess time, and spread into a general floor skirmish between Administration and isolationist forces as Senator Holt (Democrat), of West Virginia, sought to spread a tabulation of the "individual inconsistencies" of Senators on the Senate record.

Holt Blocked By Connally

Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, blocked the Holt move, whereupon the West Virginia isolationist announced he will obtain the floor later and read his "inconsistency" charges to the Senate.

Connally said it was probably the work of "some ghost writer" and he would prefer that Holt read the charges so individual Senators could answer them. Holt retorted that the statement would be his own, but that Charles Michelson, publicity director of the Democratic National Committee, was writing many of the Senate speeches for embargo repeal.

Failure of the second effort in three days to place a formal limit on Senate debate came with the announcement by Senator Johnson (Republican), of California, that he wished to confer with his isolationist forces at a meeting this morning before consenting to such a limit.

A brisk exchange between Majority Leader Barkley and Johnson followed the Californian's request that the Senate meet at noon today, so that his own group could meet at 11 a. m.

"Can't you meet at 10?" asked Barkley.

"You can't get Senators to a meeting at 10," replied Johnson.

"Government workers report earlier than that; why can't Senators?" replied Barkley.

Johnson said Senators had mail and other office matters to attend

Glum Night in Jail

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 21. — Earl Browder, national leader of the Communist Party in the United States, who was indicted today for fraudulently obtaining and using a passport, sat glumly in a Federal cell tonight despite efforts of a socially prominent matron to obtain his early release.

Maximum Term, Ten Years

After he had spent a few hours in custody, Mrs. Hester G. Huntington, a worker in philanthropy, posted $7,500 bail for him—a $5,000 U. S. Government bond and $2,500 in cash, most of it in $10 bills.

It was too late, however, to obtain the necessary court order, so Browder had to spend the night in jail.

Mrs. Huntington, who has a home at New Canaan, Conn., and a fashionable Manhattan apartment, and two daughters of subdebutante age, explained merely:

"I never met Mr. Browder personally. I am doing this as a matter of principle."

The amount she posted represented the bail requirement as amended late in the day by Federal Judge William Bondy. He previously had set it at $10,000.

Admitted Using Fake Name

An indictment containing two counts was returned this morning by the Federal grand jury investigating a fake passport ring. It charged Browder, in obtaining a passport in September, 1934, and in its renewal in February, 1937, lied when he swore he had never had a passport before.

The maximum penalty on conviction is a five-year prison sentence and $2,000 fine on each count.

As a matter of record, the indictment said, Browder had obtained a passport in the name of Nicholas

3 U-Boats Destroyed, British Claim

Fliers Tell of Two Sinkings; Nazis Lost 16 Bombers in Week, London Reports

By Tania Long
Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Oct. 23.—The loss of sixteen long-range bombers was the price paid by Germany for last week's air raids over Scotland and its attacks on the British convoy of merchant ships in the North Sea, it was disclosed by authoritative sources today.

At the same time Royal Air Force planes were reported to have sunk two more U-boats, one in the Atlantic and the other in the North Sea. A third was sunk by a British warship.

These announcements followed shortly on the news that two more British merchant vessels had been sent to the bottom, with fourteen crew members still missing tonight. The ships were the Sea Venture, 1,375 tons, which was sunk by "enemy action" off the coast of Scotland three days ago, and the Whitemantle, 1,692 tons, which sank in the North Sea after an explosion caused either by a torpedo or a mine.

Ships Sunk Total 40

Destruction of the Sea Venture and the Whitemantle sent the known British loss to 40 vessels and the loss of all nations to 54 ships.

The sinking of the Swedish Albania, 1,241 tons, in the North Sea sent Swedish losses to 7 and the Scandinavian total to 20. Neutral countries have lost 28 ships.

The possible destruction of another British ship was reported after Lisbon picked up an S.O.S. from the Baron Forbes saying she had sighted a submarine in the Atlantic. The 3,061-ton ship was silent after the first message.

Total known tonnage losses went up to 370,642.

Owners of the Albania said in Gothenburg she went down in the North Sea, possibly from a torpedo and that two lives had been lost, 19 rescued.

10 Per Cent of 1917 Losses

In totaling up its score for last week, the British government admitted that with the sinkings of the liners Mandalay and the Yorkshire, its losses at sea had "again become considerable," but pointed out that they were still small compared to 1917, when the height of the U-boat campaign was reached. Last week's losses were only 10 per ce . in number, and 21 per cent in tonnage, compared to losses in 1917, a communique stated.

The government described as "outstandingly successful" the defensive combination of British fighting planes and the antiaircraft fire off ships, which came into play during the German raids on the Firth of Forth, Scapa Flow and the attack on a convoy off the Yorkshire coast.

Compared to the German losses of at least 16 bombers, the only British losses were 30 deaths in the Firth of Forth raid, and slight damage to the cruiser Southampton and the battleship Iron Duke, it was stated, and all ships subjected to the attacks were ready to go to sea again the same day. "The first raids of

3 Lost on Peak in Icy Gale Fight Way to Miraculous Rescue

By the United Press

Pinkham Notch, N. H., Oct. 23.—Out of the teeth of the worst autumn blizzard in Mount Washington's recent history, a girl and two men trudged today—alive and well—to confound forest rangers who had given them only "one chance in a million" to survive.

Miss Anne Pearsall, 28, and Edward Coughlin, 28, both of Lowell, Mass., and Robert Bastow, 21, of Billerica, Mass., had been missing on the gale-lashed slopes of the 6,288-foot peak for more than 24 hours when two rangers found them at midafternoon.

Clad in sodden ski suits, their tattered shoes bound with string, the trio had made their way down the Dry River Valley to 30 miles from Pinkham Notch, their starting point.

They were members of a party of eight young persons who climbed the mountain in fair weather yesterday morning and who separated before beginning the descent as a squall struck the snow-capped peak.

Their five companions—three girls and two young men—made an easy descent down the so-called Carriage road to the Appalachian Mountain Club's hut at Pinkham Notch.

Coughlin and Bastow, however, linked themselves together with rope and, with Miss Pearsall clinging to the rope between them, began a treacherous "cross-country" short-cut toward another trail.

As they stumbled down the unblazed route, the storm increased. Dense clouds enveloped them. Sleet and snow froze to their clothes and

Reich Awaits Danzig Speech By Ribbentrop

Observers Doubt Peace Offer Will Be Made in Talk

By C. Brooks Peters.
Copyright by New York Times.

Berlin, Oct. 23.—Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop will address members of the Nazi Party Veterans League in Danzig tomorrow, and his speech will be broadcast throughout the Greater Reich.

While the nature of the speech was not revealed, it was said in informed quarters today that Fuehrer Hitler's foreign minister in all probability will avail himself of this occasion to restate the German position on the war. It is not believed, however, that Von Ribbentrop will have anything new to add to the elaborate pronouncement delivered by Hitler to the Reichstag October 6 The present situation, it was said, in view of British Prime Minister Chamberlain's refusal of Hitler's "last peace offer," does not warrant any new peace initiative on the part of Germany.

British Called Nervous

Speculations abroad inferring that Germany is endeavoring to make some peace move, it was declared in informed circles here, only serve to conceal the nervousness of British official quarters and their desire to distract attention from growing economic difficulties in England as well as the shock resulting from German successes on the seas and in the air.

After rejection by Great Britain of Hitler's peace proposal, the Reich government, it was set forth, feels it has spoken its last word and any fresh overtures for peace must come from the western powers. The possibility of mediation from neutral quarters remains, however, although there is no indication in

Russo-Finnish Pact Reported 'Near' in Moscow

Ankara Refused Cession of Eastern Area, Observers Told

By International News Service

Helsinki (Tuesday), Oct. 24.—The Finnish foreign office early today indicated the Moscow negotiations with Russia were nearing an agreement.

A foreign office spokesman said at midnight that reports from Moscow stated the discussions in the Kremlin were "proceeding normally and justify hopes of reaching a settlement."

Code experts stood by in anticipation of an "important message" from Moscow.

Finns Speed Defensive Work

Despite increased optimism in political circles the government speeded up its extraordinary defense measures for any emergency.

The government announced that mine fields had been laid in the Gulf of Finland between Finland and Russia.

Forbidden zones were established "for strategic reasons" over extensive areas of the country.

Cession of Islands Forecast

Moscow, Oct. 23 (AP).—Russia and Finland began a second series of negotiations tonight, and observers expected the talks to result in concession of Finnish islands to Russia.

Diplomatic circles believed Russia would emerge as the unchallenged master of the Gulf of Finland and the Baltic as the result of the conferences, following concessions gained from Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania, but would not win consent to Russian garrisons on Finnish soil.

Istanbul, Oct. 23.—A Soviet demand for the cession of Turkey's Kars and Ardahan region to Russia, and Turkey's refusal, were disclosed tonight in authoritative Istanbul quarters.

It was stated Turkey concentrated 300,000 troops and masses of war material in this area, which comprises the two easternmost Turkish provinces, after rejecting the Soviet territorial demand in the recent Moscow negotiations which were broken off.

It was reported Red army divisions were massed in Soviet Armenia opposite the concentrated Turkish forces.

Czar Won Territory

The disputed region on the eastern shores of the Black Sea and situated not far from the vital British Mosul oil area, was ceded to Turkey in 1920 by the Soviets.

Czarist Russia had obtained the territory from Turkey in 1870.

In Turkish Foreign Minister Saracoglu's recent abortive negotiations in Moscow the Soviet leaders, Josef Stalin and Premier-Foreign Commissar Molotoff flatly declared that the restoration of the Kars-Ardakan provinces to Russia must be part of any Soviet-Turkish mutual assistance pact.

After consulting with his government in Ankara, Saracoglu turned down the Russian demand and the Moscow negotiations were suspended.

Tension Rising

Immediately afterward, Turkey signed the Mediterranean mutual assistance treaty with Great Britain and France.

It was understood the Soviet demand for the areas of Kars and Ardakan were being pressed by the Soviet Armenian Republic under instructions from Moscow.

Tension between Russia and Turkey rose perceptibly as both countries appeared to be steadily increasing their frontier forces in the Caucasus Mountain region between the Black and Caspian seas.

The Kars-Ardahan region already was being nicknamed in Istanbul

Items Listed by Germany As Contraband in Cargo, Says Maritime Commission; U. S. Orders Investigation

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

A German warship has seized the American Government-owned freighter S. S. City of Flint, bound from New York to Liverpool, according to a report received last night by the United States Maritime Commission.

Confirmation came from Tass, the official Soviet Russian news agency, which reported last night that the City of Flint, with a Nazi flag flying from her mast and a Nazi crew of 18 aboard, had arrived in Kola Bay as a prize under German contraband regulations.

Murmansk, reported as the refuge of the German liner Bremen, is on Kola Bay, and that apparently was to be the internment point of the City of Flint, which recently achieved renown by rescuing 220 survivors of the liner Athenia.

Under international law, it was pointed out here last night, if a neutral ship is carrying contraband to a belligerent port the contraband can be seized. If the ship is carrying 50 per cent or more of contraband, the ship can be condemned. However, there are many conditions and exceptions attached to these general rules.

Carried a 'Typical' Cargo

The Maritime Commission announced that the City of Flint carried a cargo of approximately 4,000 tons, which included more than 50 items typical of loads carried on the New York-to-Liverpool run.

Following the lead of Great Britain, Germany, shortly after the outbreak of the war, announced two lists of contraband, one "unconditional" and the other "conditional."

Unconditional included chemicals, guns, fuel and other commodities designed primarily for battle. Conditional included food, live animals, clothing and machinery.

The suggestion was made in Berlin at the time, but not officially confirmed, that a ship carrying unconditional contraband would be fair prey for a torpedo, whereas one with conditional contraband would be taken to a port or given a chance to turn about and go home.

The Maritime Commission announced that in the City of Flint's cargo were many items listed by Germany as contraband, including these:

Taken to Tremso Saturday

Lard, cereals, canned meats and other canned goods, apples, wax, lubricating oil, cotton, sewing machines, plows, tractors, asphalt, pitch, grease, shade rollers, machinery, silk, chemicals, abrasive grains, disinfectants, feathers, rags, coffee, lumber, gauze, hair and wallboard.

The State Department announced that it had asked American envoys in Oslo and Moscow to make inquiries of the Norwegian and Russian governments concerning the circumstances of the freighter's seizure. It was expected a similar inquiry would be directed to Berlin.

According to the report received by the Maritime Commission, the City of Flint, after being boarded by a German prize crew, sailed into the Norwegian harbor of Tromso last Saturday with the Nazi flag flying. The commission said that the ship left Tromso at 6:30 p. m. the same day, but it did not know where it was bound.

This riddle was cleared up by the Tass Agency announcement in Moscow, which told how the American vessel had been sailed through the Norwegian Sea, through the sub-Arctic waters of Barents Sea and into Kola Bay.

Tass Agency, according to an International News Service report from Moscow, said that not only the American crew of approximately 35 men, but the 18 Germans aboard would be interned.

The Russian news service quoted the Germans as saying that the contraband they had found aboard included tractors, grain, fruit, leather and wax.

Germans From a Cruiser

All that was known here was that a German "naval vessel" was reported to have seized the City of Flint somewhere between New York and Liverpool, but Tass said that the 18 Nazi sailors aboard her at Kola Bay were from a German cruiser. If this is true, the seizure must have been a surprise to the British admiralty, which has announced that all German surface vessels had been cleared from the seas.

Some officials here wondered if the cruiser could have been the Admiral Scheer, which was reported two weeks ago to have appeared as a raider off Brazil.

In Melrose, Mass., the wife of Capt. Joseph A. Gainard, master of the City of Flint, was told about what had happened.

"I guess Joe's just one of those men," she told the United Press.

Capt. Gainard was a junior officer aboard the American transport President Lincoln, when she was torpedoed and sunk by a German U-boat 300 miles off the French coast during the World War. He came to Washington several years ago to attend a reunion of the President Lincoln's survivors.

News of the Flint's seizure caused a stir in Washington, but there was no particular indignation among officials who were willing to talk. Many pomted out that, under the terms of the neutrality bill soon to come to a vote in the Senate, the President is authorized to designate "combat

Suffers Heart Attack At 64; Just Returned From Circling Globe

Altadena, Calif., Oct. 23.—Zane Grey, whose prolific pen converted a romantic picture of the Old West into a colorful reality for millions of readers, died today.

The 64-year-old former dentist who wrote more than 50 novels—all of them in longhand—suffered a sudden heart attack at his palatial home.

His family said that, although he was under treatment for a heart ailment, he had appeared in excellent spirits. He had a slight attack of indigestion yesterday but said it was "nothing to worry about."

He is survived by his widow and his three children, Romer, Loren and Betty, who is Mrs. Robert W. Carney.

Grey, who deserted dentistry after four years of unsuccessful practice in New York, wrote at the amazing rate of 100,000 words a month, never revising his manuscripts after the first draft. Mrs. Grey attended to all revisions.

Long's Police Oust Ellison; Militia Ordered to Be Ready

By the Associated Press

Baton Rouge, La., Oct. 23—National Guardsmen tonight were assembled at their barracks and told to await orders in an unclarified move believed connected with Gov. Earl K. Long's coup in using State troopers to depose Attorney General David M. Ellison on the final day for qualification for State office.

Eighty-three members of Company A of the 156th Infantry received instructions to be prepared to move on orders. They previously had assembled and changed into uniforms. Gov. Long and others earlier had denied the guard had been called.

Capt. J. A. Holliday said he issued the special order only to see how fast Company A could be mobilized.

"It's nothing but a drill," he said. The troops had not been dismissed some hours later.

Belief that a countercoup was feared by Long was current when State troopers threw an armed guard about his executive offices and increased from 6 to 8 the force holding Attorney General Ellison's office. Police also had been called out to guard First Assistant Attorney General Jame. O'Connor's office in New Orleans, also displaced by Long today, and the office of District Attorney Charles A. Byrne there.

Gov. Long maintained the never-a-dull-moment tradition in State politics by striking at Ellison and O'Connor only a few hours before the midnight dead line on qualifica-

U. S. to Seek $526,000,000 At 1 Per Cent

Refunding Will Save $2,000,000 Yearly In Interest Now Paid

Treasury Secretary Morgenthau announced yesterday that the Treasury would attempt to refund the $5,232,500 of 1 ¾ per cent notes falling due December 15 into a like amount of 1 per cent notes, dating from November 1 and maturing March 15, 1944.

Aside from saving the Treasury nearly $2,000,000 a year in interest, the refunding will clear the decks for a major financing operation on December 15 involving the borrowing of a substantial amount of cash.

Morgenthau announced, meanwhile, that the Treasury would borrow another $50,000,000 of new cash next week by sale of $150,000,000 of discount bills in place of $100,000,000 of maturing bills.

Although extraordinarily low, the interest rate to be borne by the refunding notes, in comparison to the issuance last June 15 of $417,000,000 of 5-year notes at three-fourths of 1 per cent, shows the effect of the bond market break in September in tightening interest rates.

Morgenthau explained, however, that the Treasury would have had to pay a higher rate if it had refunded the December note maturities earlier. The rate before the market settled down from the September break, it is said, would have been 1¼ or 1⅜ per cent.

"We waited, however, and made money," Morgenthau declared.

He announced that the refunding offering of $206,000,000 of Commodity Credit Corporation notes had been more than 99 per cent subscribed, which is close to a record for refundings.

Barbara's Road Back to Citizenship Will Be a Long One

By International News Service

The course back to full American citizenship for Countess Barbara Hutton Mdivani Haugwitz-Reventlow will be a long one, immigration authorities said yesterday, unless she can obtain a special act of Congress, or her lawyers can find some loophole in the law.

Taking cognizance of reports that the Woolworth heiress planned to obtain an American divorce from her estranged Danish husband and would marry Robert Sweeney, young American financier, immigration authorities said such a marriage would not automatically restore her citizenship

Officials said she was admitted to this country as a Danish subject on a visitor's vise, and in order again to become an American citizen, will be obliged to leave this country and re-enter as an aspirant to citizenship—an immigrant under the Denmark immigration quota. She must then wait five years before filing her petition for naturalization papers.

tions for next January's gubernatorial primary.

The final day found five candidates in the lists, all except Long pledged to break the ten-year hold of the machine built by the spectacular tactics of the slain "Kingfish" Huey Long.

Gov. Long announced he was removing Ellison and O'Connor because he had discovered they were holding office "illegally." Ellison qualified yesterday to run for attorney general against City Attorney Burns of New Orleans, named for that post on the administration ticket Long heads.

Long named Second Assistant Attorney General Gardiner to succeed Ellison.

Brig. Gen. Guerre, commandant of the State patrol, directed six troopers' seizure of Ellison's office in the latter's absence. The attorney general had not been reached tonight for comment.

Other troopers took over O'Connor's office in New Orelans and New Orleans' police were "protecting" the office of District Attorney Charles A. Byrne there.

Late today, the force at Ellison's office was increased to eight men and four troopers to the executive offices as a special guard, indicating Long feared a possible counter-coup.

Last week, grand jurors charged Byrne was not vigorous enough in investigating reports of political corruption in New Orleans and Ellison named O'Connor to take over the district attorney's duties. After O'Connor was ousted, Byrne got his office back along with a guard of four policemen.

Ellison, once private secretary to indicted former Gov. Leche, went into office last spring. Long said today he had not been properly appointed. Ellison had served four months under Long, who stepped up from the lieutenant governorship when Leche resigned after a series of scandals began breaking.

Among those qualified to seek the Democratic gubernatorial nomination—equivalent to election in Louisiana—was Sam H. Jones, Lake Charles attorney, already singled out for special criticism by the Administration standard bearer.

Other qualifying aspirants were former Gov. and State Senator James A. Noe, an former Long lieutenant, who had broken with the present regime; James H. Morrison, Hammond attorney; and Henry Vincent Moseley, of Opelousas. Dudley J. LeBlanc, of Abbeville, and Frederick Putfark, of Covington, qualified but withdrew today.

Reported to President on Progress of Neutrality Bill to, and renewed his request. Barkley consented, but served notice on Senators to cancel any social engagements for tonight. He announced he would hold the Senate in night session, if it fails to agree to debate limitation today.

Indications were that a modified limitation would be accepted, permitting Senators to speak an aggregate of 45 minutes on the bill and 45 minutes on each amendment, opposition spokesmen said.

Meanwhile, President Roosevelt was informed by his House leaders that their continuing poll of House sentiment for embargo repeal had solute minimum" majority of 30 House votes for repeal.

Senate Democrat leaders told the President they hope to pass the bill in the Senate by Friday, in which case it should be ready for consideration in the House the following week.

President Sees Garner

Plans discussed by Administration strategists on both sides of the Capitol call tentatively for two days of debate in the House, starting Tuesday, and for adjournment of the special session before the close of next week.

The President was understood personally to oppose opening up of the session to other issues that might hold Cnogress here indefinitely. Speaker Bankhead and other Southern House members are seeking emergency relief this session for Southern drought and flood stricken States, and there has been pressure as well for other deficiency appropriations action.

For a first-hand picture of the Senate neutrality situation the President yesterday conferred at the White House with Vice President Garner, Senate Majority Leader Barkley and Senate Minority Leader McNary. Mr. Roosevelt was reported well satisfied with neutrality bill prospects in both houses. The leadership plan to conclude action on the bill in both chambers in a fortnight was disclosed following the conference.

Wiley Joins Isolationists

The day's Senate debate developed:

Announcement by Senator Wiley (Republican), of Wisconsin, hitherto uncommitted on the bill, that he would vote against repeal of the arms embargo, but he believed the embargo would be repealed nonetheless and "its repeal will not be a first step toward war."

A statement in a speech by Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, that the President had not added to the world picture of American impartiality by posing for photographs with the Rev. Frank R. Wilson after the minister read a prayer for Britain's King at St. James Episcopal Church at Hyde Park Sunday.

A speech by Nye declaring repeal of the arms embargo would, by "formal act of this Government, give aid to England and France," and declaring that "if we do,, we cannot claim to be neutral."

The Nye speech, the third he has made against embargo repeal, found Senator Minton lying in wait with excerpts from the North Dakotan's statements when he urged lifting of the embargo on arms for use in the Spanish civil war.

See "Ghosts and Goblins"

Minton said Nye, Clark and other opponents of repeal have "conjured up ghosts and goblins and bogey men" which have "freightened us all even though our nerves are steeled against Hallowe'en."

He said Nye had painted a "horrendous" picture of America taking "a bloody step toward war" if the embargo was repealed. Yet he charged Nye had advocated taking such a step a year ago by repealing the embargo against Spain. He said at the time Nye used the same argument Senatorial repeal advocates are now urging and Nye is denying. He said Nye said then he was "prompted by a desire to right an injustice" but now contends "righting an injustice would be unneutral."

Several times Nye took the floor to accuse Minton of confusing the issue. He said his proposal to lift an embargo had only to do with civil wars, and that he had objected because the embargo on Spain was enforced while the Spanish Civil War was in progress.

Clark Explains Stand

Minton retorted that the latter argument was an "afterthought" and that "a man who has been killed in a civil war is just as dead as if killed in a war among nations."

"He evidently thinks it's all right for Spaniards to kill Spaniards," put in Barkley.

"War is war, whether civil or not, continued Minton.

"Mass murder," said Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, using one of the North Dakotan's phrases.

"It makes no difference to the munitions makers," interposed Senator Lee (Democrat), of Oklahoma, as the repeal forces generally joined in the attack.

Clark twice rose to defend Nye, pointing out that the civil war was in progress when the embargo on Spain was imposed which the North Dakotan later sought to lift. For himself, Clark said he was opposed to repeal in each instance. But he said that if the argument for repeal is good now "it was good" when Nye made it.

Blames Munitions Men

Earlier in the day Nye met another organized attack from Senate Administration ranks when he asserted that munitions interests were partly responsible for American involvement in the last war. Senator Connally said he was "smearing with slime" the American war record and making "shameles, baseless and infamous" charges. Byrnes put in that loss of American lives and property from submarine warfare was solely responsible for America's last war entry," and Barkley said he resented "insinuations that bankers and munitions makers" took America into the war.

Both Nye and Clark in their speeches criticized the President's attendance of church services at which prayers were said for the King of England.

"I cannot refrain from referring to some of the things that have already gone on tending to show an absolutely lack of neutrality on the part of the Government, of those in high position," said Clark.

"At a time like this, instead of reading from the King's prayerbook we had better go to Williamsburg, Va., where the minister of the oldest church in the United States scratched from the English prayerbook, 'God save the King' and substituted 'God save the President of the United States.'"

Discuss President's Actions

Barkley questioned the importance of the incident and said the President could not have foreseen what the church prayers would be. Clark said he could not have expected the President to have "walked out" but thought he should not have posed for photographs.

Nye in his speech declared the Senate reaction would have been "different" if a German Lutheran minister had delivered the same prayer urging a German victory. He said Senators would have risen to "damn and condemn" such an incident.

In his second Senate speech against repeal, Clark declared that if Americans permitted their emotions to lead them into war they would "put a pawn on their liberties which we may never be able to redeem."

The Missouri Democrat quoted at length from Leo Cherne's "Adjusting Your Business to War," with a foreword by Assistant Secretary of War Johnson, outlining, he charged, a plan to "regiment industry and labor" if war comes. He said Cherne wrote the book with the co-operation of the War Department. He declared he was not criticizing the War Department, but wished to point out that America's involvement would establish a "dictatorship" here as complete as that of any totalitarian government abroad.

Clark said that according to the Cherne book the President, if war broke out, could put a plan into effect that would fix prices for commodities and manufactured articles, and fix labor's pay and working hours. A Government agency would be vested with power that could "make or ruin a man in his business," he said. He declared the mobilization plan would reach into every city and hamlet in the land and America would "join the rest of the regimented nations."

Opening the day's debate, Senator Wiley accused Senators on both sides of the repeal issue "fanning the fires of old hatreds—stirring the emotional embers of foreign quarrels that have been smouldering for generations." He declared that "No American war is even remotely in sight" and said many average citizens will soon realize that they have been "victims of propaganda, misinformation and illogical thinking."

In declaring against embargo repeal, Wiley said repeal or failure to repeal the embargo "would not necessarily be a step toward war" and he believed a majority of the Senators were for repeal. But he said a Senator should not "recklessly disregard the sentiment of his constituents." And in his case he said a large majority of his Wisconsin constituents are opposed to repeal.

"There is so much merit in the arguments on both sides, and where the Senate vote on the issue has been virtually determined, it would be no compromise with personal conviction to permit the studied judgment of my constituents to be the determining factor," said Wiley.

U. S. Navy Denies Taking Nazi Ship

The Navy Department last night denied reports from Panama that the German freighter Havelland had been taken into custody by an American warship.

A Department spokesman, questioned about the purported incident, branded the report erronious, and said the Havelland was "free as a lark."

Car Loadings Show Railroad Upward Swing

Pelley Reports to President on Gains Exceeding 1937 Peak

By Felix Cotten.

Armed with figures showing recent gains in carloadings, J. J. Pelley, president of the Association of American Railroads, called on President Roosevelt yesterday and made a highly optimistic report on the railroad situation.

Carloadings in the week ending October 14, the latest week for which data are available, broke through the pre-recession peak in 1937 to the highest level since 1929, he told the President.

"The picture looks very good to me," he said on emerging from the President's office.

Up 39,000 Cars

The figures which he passed on to the President showed that carloadings rose from 805,733 in the week of September 16 to 844,933 in the week ending October 14.

The latter figure, Pelley declared, is approximately at the 1918 rate. During that year, he said, 44,000,000 cars were loaded.

Meanwhile, according to an Associated Press report from Baltimore, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad reported net operating income for September of $3,842,838, compared with $2,714,529 for September, 1938.

Gross Income 15 Million

Gross income amounted to $15,612,203, with freight revenues totaling $13,764,063. Gross operating revenue for the comparable period last year was $12,602,774.

Net operating income for the first nine months of 1939, the report revealed, totaled $16,588,943 compared to $8,715,573 for the first nine months of 1938.

In addition, the Alexander Hamilton Institute, according to an Associated Press report from New York, said that, on the basis of indicated gains this year for carloadings and freight rates, operating revenues of railroads in 1939 will total $4,004,000,000, as compared with $3,565,000,000 in 1938.

11.3 Pct. Gain Forecast

Forecasts of loadings in the fourth quarter by shippers' boards, the Institute said, indicate that freight car loadings for the full year would be 11.3 per cent larger than in 1938. Moreover, returns available thus far, the Institute explained, indicate freight rates in 1939 will be 3.2 per cent higher than last year.

The outlook, the institute declared, is that the railroads will report a profit this year of $185,000,000 as contrasted to a deficit last year of $123,000,000. This will be the best showing for any year since 1930, although by no means as good as predepression returns.

econd Add Business A

Pelley remarked that carloadings were far from their 1929 peak, but he said he saw no indication the gains were leveling off.

"I'm no economist," he declared, "but from my own analysis I think things are on the up and up."

From Feast to Famine

He remarked that "we went from pretty near a famine in August to a feast in September." He attributed this, in part, to anticipated price rises and anticipated difficulties in obtaining deliveries of goods.

"I think we were going to have pretty good business anyway," he said, "and these things accelerated it."

Pelley was particularly pleased with the fact that, in the week ended October 14, carloadings rose by 10,261, although in the previous week the gain was only 54 cars. The gains in loadings, he remarked, were general, not confined to any one industrial sector.

Cars to Be Available

Pointing out that about 65,000 freight cars had been or were being built for railroads, in addition to repair programs, he declared there would be "no shortage of freight cars."

"We will be able to meet any situation that arises," he declared.

Meanwhile quarterly reports for the three months ended September 30 showed substantial gains by a number of concerns. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., according to a report from Chicago, showed a profit for the September quarter of $1,236,893, equal to $2.60 a share on its common stock. This compared with 46 cents a share in the previous quarter and $1.27 a share in the September quarter last year.

Army to Add 800 Officers From Reserve

Shortage Develops Under Peace-Time Expansion

By John G. Norris

Facing a shortage of officers under the military expansion program, the War Department plans to call about 800 reserve lieutenants into active service to meet current needs, and several housand more if the Army is further enlarged.

Funds will be asked of Congress in January for the additional 800 officers needed for the five "streamlined" divisions recently organized under an increase of Army strength to 227,000 men, officials said. And under War Department plans to further expand the military establishment to its peacetime strength of 280,000 men, some 4,000 to 5,000 other officers, will be required, it is estimated.

War Department studies on the total number of officers required under this latter plan, which would give the Nation nine mobile corps, are not yet complete. Estimates made by ranking reserve officers range from 6,000 to 10,000 more than at present, but Army officials say these are too high.

Officer Shortage Seen

The latter are somewhat doubtful that any large number of reserve officers can be obtained. They do not want to greatly increase the regular establishment at once, as such a move would create another "hump" in the promotion list such as has plagued the service since the World War.

It is planned to call in the reserves for periods of six months or a year, and then replace them with others. Reserve officers can only be ordered to active duty in peacetime on a voluntary basis, and it is believed that many thousands of them will refuse to leave their civilian pursuits for this long.

As a result many regiments will have to operate with insufficient officers, it was said, while other essential Army duties will have their staffs reduced. In some cases second lieutenants will command companies, officials said. To give the combatant units as many regular officers as possible, it is planned to cut the number assigned as instructors with National Guard, Organized Reserve and R. O. T. C. units in half.

13,425 Regular Officers

The Army now has a total of 13,425 regular officers, augmented by 1,127 Air reservists and 650 other reserve lieutenants serving a year's active duty under the authority of the Thomason act. The latter permits a maximum of 1,000 officers a year, and funds will be asked to reach this limit next year. The remainder, it is expected, will be called for six-month periods.

With funds appropriated by the last Congress, the number of Air Corps pilots is being doubled. The 800 additional reservists for the other arms will bring the total of officers, regular and reserve, to about 18,000, whether or not an additional expansion program is approved.

Seek R. O. T. C. Expansion

A group of reserve leaders has just finished a series of conferences with department officials and among themselves over plans for expanding that branch of the service next year. Officials of the Reserve Officers Association, they intend to ask Congress to provide summer training for eligible officers. This would about double the number trained now—30,000. In addition, the group will seek to increase the reserve officer strength from 104,000 to 120,000 and urge larger appropriations to permit the establishment of R. O. T. C. units at every school and college in the United States that qualifies for such drill.

Mrs. Roosevelt Picks Wasp-Waist Styles, Shops for Christmas

She Takes President's Hint in Thanksgiving Proclamation and Visits Santa Early; Makes Whirlwind Tour in 1 Hour 15 Min.

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 23.—America's First Lady, who is taller than most women, went 100 per cent for the new wasp waist today.

She picked herself an entire winter wardrobe of eight hourglass dresses.

At the same time Mrs. Roosevelt gave a boost to her husband's early Thanksgiving recommendation, starting her Christmas shopping a month earlier than last year. In proposing Thanksgiving a week earlier this year, the President had reckoned on only a seven-day headstart for Christmas business.

Rapid-Fire Shopping Raid

"This early visit," his wife said, as she made a rapid-fire purchasing raid on a midtown department store, "coincides with the suggestion for an early Thanksgiving."

In just under 1 hour 15 minutes, Mrs. Roosevelt bought her wardrobe and presents for at least 15 persons, including her newest grandchild, John Roosevelt Boettiger, of Seattle, Wash.

Stylists who helped her pick her thin-waisted dresses said Mrs. Roosevelt's height was no barrier to her enjoyment of the latest fashion—the tall, short and medium-sized ladies can have it, they said, and only the fat ones are out of luck.

Mrs. Roosevelt also bowed to a wartime vogue by picking a military cut black dress with officers' braid and red vest.

At a luncheon following the shopping tour, Mrs. Roosevelt was awarded the Parents Magazine's annual medal for "outstanding service to children."

Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers, one of the leading women in the Republican Party and a member of Congress from Massachusetts, in making the award, said it was "in recognition and appreciation of her all-embracing interest and concern for the happiness and welfare of all young people."

Believe in Youth, She Urges

"We parents bear a heavy responsibility," Mrs. Roosevelt said in response. "I wish I had as great an opportunity to learn what I have when I had young children.

"With the war going on," she said, "you cannot give them a pattern to grow up on; they must work it out for themselves. Love them, stand back of them and believe in the youth of America. Though they may not seem to meet all the requirements demanded from us in our days, they'll meet the challenge in making democracy good."

Mrs. Roosevelt went to Philadelphia this evening after another address at the Women's City Club. Tomorrow she will leave for Muncie, Ind., after another address in New York.

Fleming Tells Business Not To Fear PayAct

Administrator Says Disputes Can Be Settled in Parleys

By International News Service

Businessmen of the Nation were given assurance yesterday by Col. Philip Fleming, new wage-hours administrator, that no one need fear his enforcement of the fair labor standards act as a "crack-downer."

"I believe in most cases our disputes can be settled by sitting down to the conference table," said Fleming, veteran Army engineer, in his first press conference, since succeeding Elmer F. Andrews.

Fleming's indication of policy came a few hours before the new provisions of the wage-hours law went into effect at midnight boosting minimum national pay from 25 to 30 cents an hour, and cutting the maximum work week from 44 to 42 hours.

3,000 Affected Here

The wage increases or shorter working hours affected about 3,000 District women and juvenile workers, said Miss Gwen Geach, executive secretary of the District Minimum Wage Board. These include office workers and others employed by manufacturing and wholesale concerns, whose work is chiefly related to interstate commerce.

The District law provides a $17 wage for a 44-hour week in the so-called "white collar" class. Under the second-year clauses of the Federal act their hours will be cut to 42, or, if the employers desire to retain the 44-hour schedule, workers will receive time and one-half for the two additional hours.

Other Workers Benefit

Employes in the manufacturing and wholesale occupations, now receiving $16 for the 44-hour week, also will benefit by the shortened hours and overtime pay.

The majority of women and minors affected by the changes in the national standards are employed in telephone and telegraph offices, Miss Geach said. Others are in banks and branch offices of out-of-town manufacturing and wholesale firms.

Red Cross Opens Home Accident Prevention Week

Hazards of accidental death and injury in the home will be attacked by the American Red Cross today as it launches its fifth annual home and farm accident prevention week.

Staircases and slippery rugs and floors last year were the cause of 16,000 deaths, Harold F. Enlaws, director of Red Cross first aid and accident prevention service, said yesterday.

Burns and explosions rank second in the list of home dangers, Enlaws said, urging inspection of home frequently from cellar to attic. Last year 31,000 accidental deaths and 140,00 permanently disabling injuries resulted from mishaps in the home, he said.

Fire Dance Solicitation By Phone Called Fraud

The Disabled Firemen's Association yesterday notified police that unauthorized persons are pretending to solicit funds for the association by telephone. Association officials said authority has not been given anyone to make such solicitation.

The association is sponsoring a dance the night of February 6 at the Washington Hotel and "frauds seized on the occasion to begin soliciting contributions," it was said.

No Laughs in Wynn Separation Suit

Both sides claimed satisfaction in an out-of-court settlement of the separation suits brought against Comedian Ed Wynn by Frieda L. M. Wynn, former Follies girl (shown). Attorney for Mrs. Wynn said a written agreement makes the separation permanent and gives her certain realties and substantial weekly payments as long as she lives. (Ed says they begin at $100.)

Leaky Radiator Kills 5 Babies In New Jersey Hospital Room

By the Associated Press

Perth Amboy, N. J., Oct. 23.—Five unchristened infants died today after steam, escaping from a radiator valve, filled their nursery in the Perth Amboy Hospital.

Acting Police Chief Frank Seiboth said the valve had been repaired with adhesive tape.

Six infants occupied the nursery. Four died in the nursery. The fifth victim, 6-day-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Hatarick, of Perth Amboy, died several hours later.

Four physicians and internes worked several hours attempting to restore life to the tiny bodies.

The death of the Hatarick baby led Dr. William C. Wilentz, Middlesex County medical examiner, to perform an autopsy to ascertain definitely the cause of death. After the autopsy he said death was caused by steam asphyxiation.

Seiboth said Raymond C. Hunt, heating engineer, reported "the condition of the valve was so bad that the thread had little or no holding power with the thread in the radiator."

Seiboth quoted Hunt, engaged by Middlesex County Prosecutor Charles Morris to inspect the hospital heating plant, as saying the valve "had two pieces of adhesive tape attached to it, and there were particles of the adhesive material on the radiator on each side of the hole where the valve was attached to the radiator."

"From the condition of the thread of the air valve," Hunt's statement continued, "in my opinion it could have been dislodged either by a jar of the radiator or by the normal pressure (of steam)."

Hunt's report also noted "a rust streak" on the radiator which indicated, the engineer said, "the valve had been leaking for some time."

Miss Sarah Van Gelder, hospital superintendent, said the steam exhausted the supply of oxygen in the room between 1:30 a. m., when the nurse in charge made a routine check of the nursery temperature, and 2 a. m., when she returned to take the babies to their mothers for feeding.

The mothers, unaware of the mishap, went back to sleep when the children were not brought to them and were not awakened until 4 a. m., Miss Van Gelder said, adding:

"They took the news very sensibly and bravely. We did not have any trouble with them."

The other infants, two boys and two girls, were the 5-day-old son of Sergt. and Mrs. John Rigg, of Raritan Arsenal; the 9-day-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Jankowski, of Woodbridge; the 10-day-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Ruszala, of Perth Amboy, and the 40-day-old daughter of an unwed mother.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Abary, of Carteret, was revived.

Liner Acadia's Officers Deny Crew Insolence to Passengers

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 23.—Officers and crew members of the liner Acadia testified at a Government investigation today that passenger complaints against conduct of the crew on its westward Atlantic crossing were grossly exaggerated.

The Government opened the inquiry after passengers complained of inefficiency, insolence and riotous fighting after the liner, chartered by the Government to remove American citizens from war zones, left ports in England and Eire.

(Passengers told reporters when the ship docked docked last week that most of the trouble arose from fights between members of rival unions and that crew members disobeyed officers and insulted passengers.)

Capt. Robert H. Allen, when asked by the Federal investigators if passengers "had any cause for complaint," answered quickly: "Under the circumstances, I would say no."

Allen explained the trip was made unpleasant because the ship encountered heavy seas and storms for several days after it left Cobh October 11.

Chief Steward William Dunphy said he could furnish "1,000 incidents" of inefficiency and insolence, and exhibited two lengths of pipe he described as "blackjacks" which he said had been discovered in waiters' quarters.

He said the was driven "almost insane" from passenger complaints, and that crew members had "ganged and threatened" him.

Dunphy walked out of the hearing when the board ruled out his testimony.

Later he testified crew members had long overtime hours, that he knew of no fist fights or dissension in the galley, and that he encountered no difficulties in the kitchen.

Capt. Allen said he did not observe or receive complaints of any acts of inefficiency or insolence. Passengers,

6 Foot 9 Inch Giant Is 3 Men To the Judge

A 6-foot 9-inch 240-pound colored man gave Judge Walter J. Casey pause in Police Court yesterday.

James Grant, 24, no fixed address, had been arrested early Sunday for drunkenness in a tavern in the 100 block of L street, where he had unconsciously terrified other patrons, according to Second Precinct Patrolman R. B. McMahill.

Informed the giant colored man was employed, Judge Casey eyed him closely, inquired of his height and weight, and then suspended sentence with the observation:

"Your boss will probably need you three men back at work today."

Gravelly Point Airport Lauded By CAA Officials

Outstanding features of the new North Beach Municipal Airport, New York City, were noted yesterday for use at Gravelly Point Airport here by Col. Sumpter Smith, of the Civil Aeronautics Authority's air safety board, and six other Federal officials.

"So far as the two airports are concerned," CAA officials said, "Washington's terminal may not be on as extensive a scale as New York's, but aeronautically it will be just as complete."

They pointed out that planners of the landing field here have considered the Gravelly Point terminal's location on the Mount Vernon Memorial boulevard and have attempted to make it a "beautiful part of the development."

Two U. S. Students Held in Sweden As Spy Suspects

Stockholm, Oct. 23 (U.P.).—Two American students identified as Princeton graduates traveling in Scandinavia on scholarships were arrested today after taking photographs near a new railroad terminal south of Stockholm.

The students, John Gray Faron and Kidder Smith, were held on suspicion of violating Sweden's new espionage law. They are being held until the films of their cameras are developed and studied.

Smith said he had received permission from the foreign office to photograph non-military scenes. He said he did not notice the railroad terminal, or thought it unimportant.

The American consul was notified of the two arrests.

Puerto Rican Senate Head Flies To U. S. Hospital

Miami, Fla., Oct. 23 (AP).—Rafael Martinez Nadal, president of the Puerto Rican Senate, arrived from San Juan on a Clipper plane today en route to Baltimore for an emergency operation.

With him was his wife, Mercedes, and daughter, Zoraida, and Dr. Hugh H. Young, of Johns Hopkins Hospital.

The official was transferred by stretcher to a train which will arrive at 1:10 a. m. Wednesday in Washington. From there he will go to Baltimore by ambulance.

Pine Confirms Resignation of Eugene Carusi

Government evidence will be presented to the District grand jury by a new staff, District Attorney Pine announced yesterday as he confirmed the resignation of Assistant District Attorney Eugene F. Carusi.

Pine said he planned to recommend a successor to Carusi to the Department of Justice today.

Carusi resigned last Friday, saying his duties as dean of economics in National University would require all his time.

Liquor License Suspended 3 Days

Accused by the ABC Board of permitting consumption of alcoholic drinks after hours, the Lounge Riviera, cocktail and supper room of the Hotel 2400 Sixteenth street, yesterday lost its liquor license for three days.

Policeman M. O. Myers, vice squad "undercover" agent, testified he purchased a highball at 1:45 a. m. Saturday and the Riviera management allowed him to drink it after the 2 a. m. bar-closing hour. Myers said he saw several other patrons drinking more than half an hour after the deadline requiring that all glasses be removed from tables.

Farish Backed By Sen. King at TNEC Probe

Oil Executive States Standardization of Gas Would BeBackward Step

By James D. Secrest.

Any governmental attempt to standardize the quality of gasoline would constitute a backward rather than a forward step, William S. Farish, president of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, told the National Economic Committee yesterday.

The petroleum industry is so pressed by development of the automobile motor and technological improvement, Farish said, that refinery equipment becomes obsolete within five years unless renewed. Twenty years ago Navy gasoline was the standard for the industry, he said, whereas today it stands at the bottom of the list.

The last witness in the oil phase of the monopoly inquiry, Farish, who appeared as a spokesman for the American Petroleum Institute, stirred up clashes within the committee as he expounded his views of the modern corporation.

Defended by Senator King

His position was stanchly defended from time to time by Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, but challenged more often by Administration New Dealers.

"Big business today," Farish said, "is forced to operate in a gold fish bowl. Even if executives do not have a sense of public responsibility to begin with, the spotlight forces them to acquire such a sense."

A further suggestion that when directors of a corporation fail to accept this public responsibility they are overriden by more public-minded executives brought a sarcastic retort from Willis J. Ballinger, economic advisor to the Federal Trade Commission.

After reciting a list of prominent business figures exposed by Government inquiries, Ballinger added cryptically:

"Your statement about the uprightness of corporations is rather optimistic."

Lubin Presses Witness

Chairman O'Mahoney and Senator King got into an argument over governmental standardization until Representative Sumners (Democrat), of Texas, interjected the observation that the witness wasn't acting in the capacity of a judge.

Isador Lubin, commissioner of labor statistics, pressed the witness for an answer to his question as to what protection a small stockholder has against inefficiency or corruption in the management of a business.

"He can go to the annual meetings and ask questions," retorted Farish. "He can put the management on the spot."

Farish, a heavy set man who measured his words before answering the barrage of questions from committee members, had time to read only a small part of a 32-page statement by the time the hearing was recessed until today.

He insisted at every opportunity that the small business man and the independent promoter still have a vital role in the petroleum industry.

"Most oil wells in the United States are owned by independents," he said. "The credit for discovery of America's oil fields goes to the small exploratory enterprize rather than to the large organization. The small independent has really enlarged slightly his proportion of reserves in recent years."

Zane Grey Dies; Wrote 50 Novels

"Western Union," a tale of the development of the Nation's telegraphic system.

Grey was born January 31, 1875, at Zanesville, Ohio. His father, Lewis M. Grey, was an Ohio backwoodsman, preacher and physician.

First Books Failures

Through his mother, Alice Josephine Zane, he was descended from Col. Ebenezer Zane, a Danish exile who crossed the Atlantic with William Penn. Col. Zane married a woman of partial Indian blood and fathered four sons and a daughter who won recognition in Revolutionary and frontier days.

Grey was graduated in dental surgery in 1896 from the University of Pennsylvania. Twenty years later the university gave him an honorary degree of doctor of literature.

After his short-lived career as a dentist—from 1898 until 1904—Grey turned to fiction.

His early books were notably unsuccessful—he wrote one novel three times without selling it—and only two persons, a brother and Lina Elise Roth, who became his wife in 1905, encouraged him to continue.

The first literary money-maker, "The Heritage of the Desert," appeared in 1910. "Riders of the Purple Sage" met with great antagonism from the Mormons, but sold almost 1,000,000 copies and was made into a profitable motion picture. Many of Grey's other novels found their way to cinema adaptation.

Dies May Ask Red and Bund Trials as Foreign Agents

Before the Dies Committee yesterday was Harry F. Ward, chairman of the American League for Peace and Democracy. He told the committee that the league could not now be controlled by "any political group." He admitted that a 1934 Chicago convention of the organization was "more leftist than any gathering since"

By John B. Oakes

Post Staff Writer.

A bitter clash between Chairman Dies and a young Government attorney who heads the Washington branch of the American League for Peace and Democracy brought to a roaring climax yesterday's seven-hour session of the House Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities.

Earlier in the day, Dies announced he might ask District Attorney Pine to take "immediate action" against the Communist Party and the German-American Bund as unregistered agents of foreign governments.

Dies, who long has advocated prosecution of both Reds and Nazis, said "if there is any further delay not necessitated by strong reasons, I will request the committee to authorize me to place the whole case before Pine for immediate action."

Aiming his request at the State and Justice Departments, Dies asserted that "this is not in criticism of the Departments of Justice and State, but the evidence is now so conclusive that there is no excuse known to me for further delay."

Pine Has No Information

Pine told The Post he had received no information about alleged violation of the registration act.

The chairman's row with Harry C. Lamberton, head of the Washington branch of the A. L. P. D., broke out while Lamberton was on the stand protesting against the tactics of Robert Barker, a committee agent, in obtaining records of the Washington office.

Alleging he had been subjected to duress by representatives of the committee, Lamberton challenged Dies to waive Congressional immunity.

"The best way to test this would be to allow us to bring suit," snapped Lamberton, an attorney in the Rural Electrification Administration.

"That's a clever strategem," Dies retorted, as he proceeded to throw doubt on the accuracy of a statement put out by the A. L. P. D. The chairman never finished his sentence, however.

Leaning across the witness table and shaking his finger in Dies' face, Lamberton roared, "I know every word of that's true, and you know it is, too!"

Dies Demands "Respect"

Banging down his gavel, Dies shouted, "You behave yourself. You're an employe of the United States Government and you owe respect to a Congressional committee."

"I have great respect for your position, Mr. Chairman," Lamberton shot back. When Dies commented on the implication, the witness replied, "I'm not drawing any inferences."

Dies asserted that no records of the A. L. P. D. were taken from its offices until after the committee had obtained consent of Lamberton and Dr. Harry F. Ward, national chairman of the league.

"We don't object to giving up our records," said Lamberton. "We object to a committee agent coming in and taking charge of our office."

After Barker had denied that was a true picture, Representative Starnes (Democrat), of Alabama, cautioned Lamberton to "be more careful with your facts."

The committee's agents visited the A. L. P. D. offices at 804 Seventeenth street northwest on September 28, armed with a subpena, to obtain the organization's membership list.

Lamberton told the committee that the A. L. P. D. numbers among its local members 700 Government employes, whose salaries range, Barker said, from $1,260 to $10,000 a year.

Just before adjournment of the committee at 6:10 p. m., Barker read into the record a letter Edwin S. Smith, member of the National Labor Relations Board, allegedly sent last year to the national director of New America, a purportedly "revolutionary" organization.

The letter, addressed to Thomas H. Wright, of Chicago, stated that Smith was forwarding material on proposed amendments to the National labor relations act, with especial reference to the Vandenberg amendments.

"You may feel perfectly free to make use of the arguments," the letter stated, but added a caution against giving any publicity "as to the source."

College Professor Quizzed

Dr. Ward, 66-year-old professor of Christian ethics at the Union Theological Seminary in New York, was examined most of the day by a onetime pupil, J. B. Matthews, the committee's director of research.

Vigorously denying the allegation that the A. L. P. D. is controlled by the Communist Party, Ward admitted it has Communist members and that the party contributes "$2,000 or $3,000 a year" out of a total A. L. P. D. budget ten times as large.

Ward pointed out that, far from following the Communist "line," the A. L. P. D. favors revision of the present neutrality law. A decision on the merits of the Soviet expansion in Poland and the Baltic will be considered at a conference in Philadelphia this week, he said.

Ward made frequent jabs at Matthews, one of the organizers of the A. L. P. D.'s parent organization, the American League Against War and Fascism. The witness also clashed often with Starnes and in one exchange with the Alabaman asserted that "Congress can't give the committee the power to inquire into personal opinions."

"I don't desire any lecture from the gentleman on the Constitution," Starnes retorted.

Women Today Held Equal in Talent to Napoleon's Wife

Miss Mary Sabarth, Agriculture Graduate School lecturer on famous women of history, yesterday told the Women's National Democratic Club about Empress Eugenie, wife of Napoleon III—one of the world's cleverest and most beautiful women whose career failed when she got into politics.

Speaking at the club's luncheon, Miss Sabarth told also of Mme. de Maintenon's 20 years of patience and wisdom in marrying Louis XIV and of Catherine of Russia.

After the lecture she said informally she didn't think those women had powers and talents not possessed, potentially at least, by some modern women, but remarked that "the competition was not so great in those days."

Society Woman Puts Up Bail For Browder

Communist, Charged With Passport Fraud, Handcuffed to Felon

Dozenberg in 1921 and another in the name of George Morris in 1927—long before the United States recognized Soviet Russia.

The fraud charged by the Government was based on Browder's allegedly false statements in connection with issuance of the passport in his real name, and the use of this passport.

Browder himself, on September 6, had admitted to the Dies committee investigating un-American activities that he had traveled abroad on a passport bearing a fictitious name, but had refused to enlighten the committee further, standing on his constitutional grounds that he might incriminate himself.

United States Attorney John T. Cahill said today his office has been investigating "for many months all activities with respect to passport frauds," and that further action may be expected.

Browder apparently was taken by surprise by the swift move of the grand jury. Under subpena to testify, he had gone to the Federal building and was waiting in an anteroom when the indictment was returned. He was arrested, arraigned at once before Federal Judge William Bondy and pleaded innocent.

'Cuffed to Dope Peddler

After fingerpriting he was handcuffed to a man who had just been sentenced to serve 18 months for peddling narcotics. They were taken in a van with other prisoners to the House of Detention.

The mild-mannered former bookkeeper, who in 1935 told the Communist International in Moscow that the revolutionary movement was progressing in the United States, had nothing to say. As he departed for jail he didn't ask for the privilege of telephoning a bondsman or a lawyer.

In detailing his background at the Federal building, Browder said he was born at Wichita, Kans., on May 20, 1891, had no apparent occupation and had never been arrested.

The grand jury investigation directed by Cahill's office was a continuation of the notorious Robinson-Rubens passport case in which three men were convicted here earlier this year.

Murphy Called "Listless"

Adolph Arnold Rubens, traveling on a passport issued in the name of Donald Robinson, and his wife, Ruth Norma Robinson, were arrested in Russia two years ago. She eventually was freed, but her husband's fate remains a mystery.

The passports on which they had traveled were fraudulently obtained and the three men who were charged with aiding in obtaining the passports were convicted early this year.

Evidence adduced at their trial was limited and Cahill's office declined to discuss what other information was available.

The fact that action was expected today was disclosed last night in Washington by the Department of Justice shortly after the Republican National Committee issued an attack on Attorney General Murphy by Representative Thomas (Republican), of New Jersey, a member of the Dies committee.

Thomas accused Murphy of being "strangely indifferent and listless" towards Browder's testimony before the Dies Committee.

Dies Defends Murphy

The reply of the Department of Justice was that the department has been "actively preparing this case and others for some time. . . ."

Thomas, at his home in Allendale, N. J., reiterated his criticism of Murphy today, and said:

"Within a few days I plan to call to the country's attention another incident of the department's laxity in enforcing the law, unless action meanwhile is taken. So, if the department has any other cases in preparation, it had better announce them and I hope they won't hold their announcement until a Sunday afternoon."

However, in Washington, Chairman Dies (Democrat), of Texas, condemned the attack as "entirely unjustified."

"The chair," said Dies, "condemns the action of any member of the committee in injecting partisanship into these hearings."

Browder, the son of a school teacher descended from Virginia pioneers, resigned from the Socialist party in 1912, and became active in the trade union group in the American Federation of Labor, led by William Z. Foster. Browder succeeded Foster in 1930 as general secretary of the Communist party here and was a presidential candidate in 1932 and 1936.

Survived a 'Chance in a Million'

Edward Coughlin and Anne Pearsall, two of three members of a Lowell, Mass., mountain climbing club, who were found by forest rangers yesterday after having been missing 24 hours in a blizzard on Mount Washington, New England's highest peak

3 Cheat Death On N.H. Mountain

70, then 80 miles an hour—and, at its peak, was recorded by Government observers atop New England's highest mountain at 96 miles an hour.

It was 2:15 p. m. yesterday when the trio started down the mountain.

"We stumbled along until 2 o'clock this morning," recounted Miss Pearsall, a petite brunette, after she had had warm food and clothing at the Appalachian club hut.

"Finally we just had to stop and seek shelter from the storm."

Their shelter was a huge boulder far down in the Dry River Valley toward the base of the mountain. There they snuggled together for warmth, taking fitful naps in the biting cold.

Reach Forest Shelter

At dawn they set out again, and 10 hours later they came to a tiny shelter established by the U. S. Forest Service as a skiers' refuge. There they found a small package of tea and a discarded grapefruit can. While Coughlin made a fire with matches and twigs found in the shelter, Miss Pearsall fetched water from a nearby brook and brewed tea—the first refreshment they had had since the previous day.

Refreshed, they set out again and soon after were found by the two rangers, Ed Moody, a member of the 1933-1935 Byrd Antarctic expedition, and Alec Behr.

They were bundled into the rangers' automobile and sped to the Appalachian Club hut. Of the 60 rangers and volunteers who joined the search this morning, several were continuing the hunt tonight, unaware they had been found.

Legal Bureaus Advocated by Dean Garrison

U. of Wisconsin Official Addresses Lawyers Guild

Dean Lloyd K. Garrison, of the University of Wisconsin Law School, yesterday called on members of the bar to act as "lawyer statesmen" in solving the problem of "too many lawyers and too little legal service."

The traditional approach to the problem, Dean Garrison said, has been "artificial contraction of the number of lawyers permitted to practice, but there is growing recognition today that the true answer is to bring legal service to the great urban middle income group."

Dean Garrison, vice president of the National Lawyers Guild, spoke before 200 members and guests of the District Guild Chapter at a luncheon at the National Press Club.

As an example of effective expansion of legal service he cited the "neighborhood law office" plan going into operation in Philadelphia November 1. Locations of the six offices and fee schedules have been given wide publicity, he said.

Clients will pay $1 for a consultation of half an hour or less, $4 and up for drafting of wills, deeds and similar documents, and from $15 up for representation in suits, he explained.

Garrison said he would shortly announce appointment of a national, nonpartisan committee, consisting of lawyers, judges and educators, to coordinate plans for expansion of legal services in all parts of the country.

Dutch Banks Get 17½ Tons Of Soviet Gold

News Calms London's Fears Metal Was Destined for Reich

By International News Service

London, Oct. 23.—The 17½ tons of Soviet gold, which was reported to have been shipped to Germany, actually has been deposited in a Dutch bank to finance Russian purchases from the United States, according to information reaching British official circles late tonight.

The gold has a value of about $19,600,000. Five days ago a report said it had left Moscow and was believed en route to Berlin.

It was pointed out in London, however, that when the wa rbroke out, Russia had orders placed in Britain for large quantities of machine tools. British manufacturers found themselves unable to fill these orders owing to the war requirements placed upon their factories.

Official London quarters said it is now regarded as reasonable to suppose that Soviet purchases in the United States will include machine tools which Russia cannot obtain in Britain.

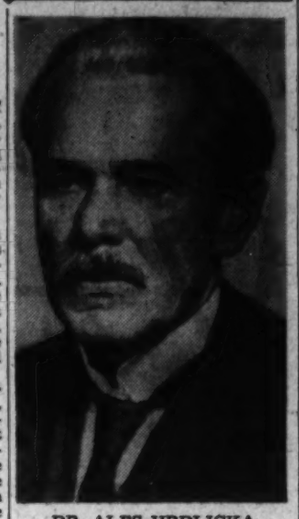
R. H. Hudson, parliamentary undersecretary for foreign affairs, told Commons last week, in response to a question, that the foreign office "had reason to believe" reports of the movement of Soviet gold to Netherlands banks.

British circles, even before Hudson's statement, had been alarmed by the rumors, fearing the gold was being deposited to the credit of the German government.

Whatever the actual status of the deposits—whether for the use of Soviet Russia in buying from the United States and other neutrals, or for the use of the German government—reports of gold stock increases in Netherlands bank statements recently have tended to confirm the heavy influx of gold "from a country to the east."

Dr. Hrdlicka Says Russians Love All Things American

Famous Scientist Breaks His Silence On Trip to Siberia



DR. ALES HRDLICKA

A white-maned scientist, one of the world's greatest anthropologists, yesterday broke a long stolid silence and spoke softly, intensely, but reluctantly of a 16,000-mile voyage that took him through the vastest and most enigmatic country in the world.

For 29 years Dr. Ales Hrdlicka (pronounced Alesh Herlitschka) has been curator of physical anthropology at the National Museum. A pioneer in his field, today at the age of 70 he is the center of a great "school" of scientific thought, and research men all over the globe dwell upon his every published word.

Returning from research in Russia and Siberia several weeks ago, he refused to tell what he saw. Yesterday he explained in a hesitant voice his deep fear of being misunderstood if he should say that he found entering Russia in April "like going into a quiet countryside from a tumultuous city." No war-scare headlines, no fright and confusion amid blaring radio accounts of troops on the march.

No Interest in Politics

Like Thomas Mann, the great German novelist, he insisted again and again, "I am not a political man. I have no interest in or knowledge of politics. I look at a country to study the way people develop, and I love the people, every people, all over the earth."

He was impressed with the love the Russian people, peasants and city-folk, bear America and all things American.

"They look at us as apart from the rest of the world, inhabitants of a vast country like their own. Everywhere you go, you hear, 'Make room, make room, hurry, here is an American!' In trolleys in Moscow, they become excited and you hear, 'No seat? What? No seat? For an American? Give him a seat!'"

In the villages of Siberia, he said, "Americans seem to have a halo about them. The peasants beg you to taste their hospitality."

Peasants Resemble Indians

In Irkutsk, Siberia, at the end of July it was hot, a dry heat, and the fields he saw were green with the harvest just begun. But the peasants, who he finds resemble the American Indian, took time from their work to gather around and ask about America.

The huge, undeveloped country reminded him of the United States 60 years ago, when he came here from his native Bohemia. The Russians, he said, think in terms of the example America has set for great growth and the conversion of trackless forests into fertile fields.

"What about Stalin and the OGPU and the secret police," the reporter asked.

The stocky scientist shook his head in annoyance, "I know nothing about those things," he said. "I thought . . . I heard I would be watched. But all the time I was in Moscow I saw just one policeman."

His thin, tan skin wrinkled like parchment as he frowned. "I'm not a political man. I know nothing of politics," he said.

"The people talk of the 'capitalist nations' sometimes, and include America. But when they do, it's all abstract. Underneath they feel close to America, where there is no nobility and there is more equality than elsewhere."

Advance Gifts To D. C. Chest Total $50,000

Campaign Meeting Is Held at Willard by Volunteer Workers

Pledges totaling approximately $50,000 were reported yesterday at the meeting of the advance gifts unit of the twelfth annual Community Chest campaign, held in the Willard Hotel.

Thomas P. Morgan, jr., chairman of the unit, told 200 volunteer workers that about 10 per cent of the section's $321,000 quota already is assured. Seventeen out of 62 donors increased their pledges over last year, he said. No decreased contribution was reported.

Among women prominent in social and civic life who appeared yesterday to report advance gifts were Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith, vice chairman of the unit; Mrs. Robert V. Fleming, Mrs. Reginald S. Huidekoper, Mrs. Selden Chapin, Mrs. Lewis Clark, Mrs. Walter G. Distler, Mrs. Wilson Compton, Mrs. William Foster Burdick, Mrs. Ethel Ward, Mrs. George Scriven and Mrs. George A. Garrett.

Today's "Go And See" schedule takes visitors to four Community Chest agencies—the Y. M. C. A., the Boys Club of Alexandria, St. Ann's Infant Asylum and George Washington University Hospital, one of the institutions associated with the Chest's hospitalization fund.

William W. Wheeler, chairman of the Metropolitan Unit, met last night at 2400 Sixteenth street northwest with team captains of area 3 in the northwest section. The meeting was called by Mrs. Louis Kalishstein, area chairman.

Russo-Finnish Pact Reported Near

prepared to yield to Soviet demands, was summoned to the Kremlin at 6 p. m. (12 noon, E.S.T.) after waiting most of the day.

The first talks were still under way several hours later with the prospect they would be continued into the night.

Although the Finns were reported resigned to granting some islands for Soviet military bases, it was understood they would resist if the questions of placing troops on Finnish soil were raised.

It was understood the Finns, backed up by the Scandinavian states, would vigorously oppose any Russian move to take control of the strategic Aaland Islands in the Gulf of Bothnia.

The Finns were hopeful the conferences would end quickly. They pinned this hope on the belief Russia wants to remain neutral in the European war and desires to avoid a fight with her small northern neighbor which might prove to be the start of a general conflict.

Meanwhile, indications of Russia's friendship with Germany was seen in reports from unofficial but reliable sources that the government soon would give a ten-day "festival of German art," including concerts by Bach, Beethoven, Schubert and other German composers.

Russia has never given a "ten-day festival" devoted to the works of foreign artists, although she has done so for Russian minorities.

"Free" Election—One Slate

The press carefully emphasized the "free" nature of yesterday's plebiscite in the Polish Ukraine and White Russia to determine whether the territory should join the U. S. S. R. Newspapers said among those voting were the Count and Countess Pototzky, widely known Polish noble family in Lwow, and 60 nuns.

The result of the ballot has not been announced. There was only one slate of candidates—those favoring annexation by Russia.

The Soviet public, which had not been informed that Paasikivi had left here after the first conferences for instructions in Helsinki, were informed today over the radio of his return.

U-Boat Tows Crew Of Sunken Ship, Master Reports

By the United Press

Goetborg, Sweden, Oct. 23.—Capt. Hugo Stolpe, master of the 925-ton Swedish steamer Gustav Adolf, sunk in a storm off the Shetlands by a German submarine, today said the U-boat towed a lifeboat containing 19 of his crew for three and a half hours until a neutral vessel was sighted.

Stolpe, who landed on the Norwegian coast, said the U-boat disappeared after making certain the men were safely aboard the 6,089-ton Norwegian freighter Biscaya off the Shetlands.

After their ship went down, the men in the lifeboat started rowing toward the Shetlands. The submarine reappeared and offered to "taxi" the lifeboats. The towing wires broke three times in the high seas before the lifeboat finally was taken in tow.

"When the U-boat saw the Biscaya's smoke," Stolpe said, "the commander steered directly towards it and, when near enough, fired two shots to attract the Biscaya's attention. As soon as the Biscaya stopped, the U-boat cut the tow wires, submerged and disappeared."

Employment of children less than 16 years old has not disappeared in American industry, it has been demonstrated in the first year of administering the child-labor provisions of the fair labor standards act of 1938, it was said yesterday b ythe children's bureau, Labor Department.

At the end of August, the bureau had found nearly 500 children illegally employed in establishments producing goods for interstate commerce. One-third of them were reported to be less than 14 years old.

Who provides the bread and butter at YOUR house? And just how big a MOUNTAIN of bread and butter do you think it would take to feed ALL THE FAMILIES in America for a year?

The figures—over a thousand million dollars' worth—are too big to bother yourself about. But here's an amazing thing: The benefits of life insurance last year were enough to supply the whole nation with all its bread and butter.

But the whole nation doesn't receive all its life insurance benefits at any one time. Therefore, the millions who did get life insurance benefits last year had more than just bread and butter from them. They had warm clothes, schoolbooks, shoes and shelter, and other things which make life secure.

That is life insurance in action . . .

Neutral Bloc In Balkans Sped in Talks

Italy Believed to Be Favorable; Allies Would Gain by Move

By Eugene Kovacs.

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Bucharest, Oct. 23.—It was understood tonight that plans to form a neutral bloc of southeastern European countries are under serious negotiations and sources close to the foreign office indicate the idea is much discussed.

The Rumanian press is speaking openly about the necessity for such a bloc, which would insure peace in the Balkans. It is felt here that the initiative is now being taken by Rumania, whose geographical situation as well as her relations with the other states, enables her to take diplomatic action.

Informed circles believe that the Ankara pact, aligning Turkey with Britain and France, excludes the possibility of war in this part of Europe, and therefore the moment is propitious for diplomatic action. Nevertheless, according to this country's views, the basis for such an undertaking would necessarily be the status quo.

Bulgaria Needed

Since Turkey, Greece and Yugoslavia joined Rumania in the Balkan Entente, it is fel they would not make difficulties on such a basis, for there is a recognized need to negotiate for the participation of Bulgaria.

It seems at this moment that Bulgaria is following a Pan-Slavic policy and hoping for support from Russia. It is believed that in the end Bulgaria will remember the unfortunate results of her last two wars and join the project.

Rumania also would like to see Hungary a member. Discussions in this direction are being pursued. The results of these talks could not be foreseen, as Hungary's situation is worse following the Polish defeat. For the first time she now has a common frontier with Russia, as well as Germany, and her policy must be cautious.

The role of Italy is closely watched. Shortly after the war began the idea of a neutral bloc was launched in Rome. It is believed here Italy would like to join such a group. In this way her position as a Balkan power—established by the acquisition of Albania—would obtain de facto recognition.

Meeting May Be Called

Budapest, Oct. 23 (AP).—Reports that Italy was pushing formation of a bloc of southeastern European nations were interpreted by Balkan diplomats tonight as foreshadowing better relations between the Fascist government and Britain and France.

Pointing out that such a bloc, composed of Hungary, Yugoslavia, Greece, Bulgaria, Rumania and Turkey, would resist expansion of Soviet or German influence in the region, diplomats declared it would provide a common ground for a meeting of the Fascists with the western Allies.

There were widespread reports—without official confirmation—that Premier Mussolini intended to call a meeting of the interested states at Rome or Belgrade, perhaps as early as next week.

Allied Position Stronger

Diplomats said formation of a Balkan neutral bloc would be made easier by the fact that Turkey already was allied to Britain and France while Greece and Rumania had French-British pledges for defense of their independence. Yugoslavia always has been in close sympathy with France and Britain and King Boris of Bulgaria was said to favor close relations with those powers.

It was believed Bulgaria's new government would agree to co-operate with its neighbors under Italian leadership, thus postponing territorial demands on Rumania and Greece.

The Budapest newspaper Fuggetlen Magyarorszag, in an apparently inspired article from Rome, said "a Soviet attempt to take Bessarabia from Rumania would be considered in Rome as having 'unhealthy' consequences in the Balkans. Such a move would provoke unrest in Italy."

Kiosseivanoff Remains

Copyright by New York Times.

Sofia, Oct. 23.—Bulgaria's three-day cabinet crisis ended tonight when King Boris called on his veteran collaborator, George Kiosseivanoff, to form a new government, the eighth in which Kiosseivanoff is prime minister. He also retains the post of foreign minister.

It was understood that Boris had accepted the resignation of the last cabinet in order to consult with political leaders and sound out public opinion. But it is significent that none of the politicians with whom the King talked was selected.

Of the ten members of the present cabinet, six were in the last, and it is widely assumed that its policies will remain largely the same. It is stated in authoritative quarters the foreign policy will stay unchanged, based on strict neutrality and friendly relations with all countries.

Germans Raise Fine on Jews To 25% of All Their Property

Those Who Paid Last Installment Aug. 15 On Grynszpan Levy of Year Ago Now Must Raise $100,000,000 More by Nov. 15

By Joseph Barnes.

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Berlin, Oct. 23.—The collective fine levied a year ago on the Jews of Germany, which required them to pay 20 per cent of all their property to the Nazi state, was increased today by an additional 5 per cent levy.

Jews who thought they had paid their last installment on August 15 now will have to find in cash before November 15 another 250,000,000 marks ($100,000,000).

The exact amount collected since the "Black Thursday" of last year has not officially been made public. It is reliably reported that approximately 750,000,000 marks ($300,000,000) already has been paid by German Jews as punishment for the assassination of a German Embassy secretary in Paris by Herschel Grynszpan, 17-year-old Polish Jew, which still is serving as pretext for the greatest Jewish pogrom in history.

Although the new fine today was announced as 5 per cent of the property of Jews remaining in Germany, it was understood this figure may be raised, if necessary, to make the total collected 1,000,000,000 marks.

Stock Market Hurt

How big this is can be understood from the fact that the total amount raised for charity in Germany last year was announced last week as 535,000,000 marks, or about half the Jewish fine.

Wealthy Jews will be required to pay more than this additional 5 per cent if the total is not raised in the next three weeks, it is reported, and the earlier exemption from the fine of Jews with less than 5,000 marks property will be lifted, if necessary, to raise the total.

By August 15 the German Jews already had paid one-fifth of all their property in this fine. Propaganda Minister Goebbels earlier had estimated that the Jewish wealth in Germany amounted to 8,000,000,000 marks.

Weakness in stock market quotations several times in the last year has been attributed to the forced liquidation of securities formerly owned by Jews, and it is reported the new fine may be paid in securities directly in order to avoid forced selling on the market.

War Halts Emigration

The opening of the war has dropped the Jews of Germany considerably deeper into the strange proletarianized status which the Nazis reserve for them. Thousands have been conscripted for labor service gangs.

In many cities Jews now are allowed to purchase food and other goods only in special stores and at special terms. In Berlin there are articles to be seen in stores with the placard "No ration cards needed for purchases by Aryans." Throughout most of Germany radio sets have been confiscated from all Jews.

There have been no recent repetitions of the public pogroms which featured German life 11 months ago. But the war has closed the thin trickle of emigration for those lucky enough to get foreign visas. Also, as a result of the German-Soviet "friendship," it has left the Jews now as the sole scapegoats for the domestic troubles of Germany in the speeches of Nazi leaders.

The torpedoing of H. M. S. Courageous was an ill wind that blew one sailor good.

The case is that of Capt. John L. Reynolds, who, with Pilot F. Leroy Taylor, was found guilty yesterday by the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation of inattention to duty, using excessive speed and failing to use proper care in approaching St. Georges Bridge, in the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal. Their vessel crashed into the bridge January 10, 1939.

However, Assistant Secretary of Commerce J. Monroe Johnson said that recognition was made of the rescue of 55 survivors of the Courageous by Capt. Reynolds, then commanding the S. S. Collingsworth. The act was described as an "excellent performance in an extraordinary emergency at sea."

No action was taken against his license, but that of Pilot Taylor was suspended for 30 days.

zones" which American ships would have to avoid.

Since the City of Flint was headed for an area infested by German submarines, it was regarded as almost certain that she would not have sailed for Liverpool had the neutrality bill with its cash-and-carry provisions been the law.

Comment from members of the Senate follows:

Senator Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina—"From the simple statement reported thus far it seems to be a most remarkable proceeding on the part of the German government.

"The United States will certainly demand an explanation, and when we have the full details we will be better able to judge the matter. Under the pending repeal bill, there could be no such incident."

Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), Washington—"This is only a demonstration of the necessity of Congress arriving at some conclusion regarding reinstatement of the cash and carry provision of the neutrality act.

"Three weeks ago I pointed out the constant danger involved in the delay on this legislation. I hope that opponents of the bill will take notice of the ominous nature of this warning. This is no time to filibuster."

Senator Austin (Republican), of Vermont—"There is nothing to get excited about. If the nationals of a neutral nation continue to exercise their rights they must contemplate such hazards.

"The shipping provisions of the revised neutrality bill are designed to prevent such hazards despite the existence of those rights. But there is nothing in this incident that ought to excite American people because it's just what is to be expected."

Great Britain has searched a number of American freighters after taking them to British ports. The first to be so treated was the S. S. Warrior, which was relieved of a cargo of 5,900 tons of phosphate, which a German firm had paid for before the ship left Mobile, Ala.

Dr. Edward S. Corwin, McCormick professor of jurisprudence at Princeton University, said last night that Germany was within her rights under international law in seizing the City of Flint if the ship carried contraband as stated by the Maritime Commission.

One of the most interesting developments, the international law expert said, will be to clarify Russia's real relations with Germany.

"The point at issue," Dr. Corwin told the United Press, "is the taking of the boat into the supposedly neutral Soviet port of Murmansk. This is an issue to be settled among the United States, Russia and Germany.

"As between Russia and the United States, the United States may ask Russia for a statement on her position as regards the warring nations. If Russia maintains her neutrality, the United States may protest and ask for the return of the City of Flint. If Russia indicates that she is a belligerent, then vessels carrying contraband to Russia will be subject to seizure by Britain and France."

German Ports Closed

When Germany announced her contraband lists, Nazi spokesmen said that ships carrying ronditional contraband either would be taken to a German port or given a chance to go home.

Germans Increasing Pressure On Western Front, Says Paris

War Ministry Reports Activity Along Maginot Line; Daladier Calls Parliament To Consider Budget for Year of Conflict

By the Associated Press

Paris, Oct. 23.—The Germans were reported tonight to be increasing pressure on the French advance line after five days of almost dead calm on the Western Front.

As the French strengthened their outposts to meet renewed German activity, reinforced patrols of both sides skirmished briskly along the northern flank where the Nazis have been cautiously feeling their way with units as small as three and five men.

The French evening communique said there was "marked activity" of contact elements west of the Saar River.

Parliament to Be Called

As the Western Front came to life, Premier Daladier announced he had decided to summon Parliament to meet the latter part of November to consider the 1940 budget for another war year.

The semidictatorial powers under which Daladier has been ruling France expire November 30. All decrees enacted by his government must be approved by Parliament before that date.

The meeting of Parliament will be the first since the war began.

A pessimistic note was struck tonight by retired French Gen. Maurice Duval, writing in the authoritative Journal des Debats. He summed up the war to date by saying that the French were presented with the problem of cracking the Siegfried Line and "simply had to admit our impotence."

The general wrote frankly that "We cannot turn the Siegfried Line unless the Germans, taking the initiative, attack through Holland, Belgium or Switzerland and draw us into action there."

French Drive at Morale

Gen. Duval added that unless the Siegfried Line fell from within because the French-British naval blockade caused a German political revolution, the only route to victory might be a direct offensive against the German fortifications.

Although Gen. Duval indicated the Siegfried Line would have to be cracked, the French indicated their tactics were aimed at sapping Germany's civilian morale, while avoiding "needless" sacrifice of their troops.

They said the only type of action now being waged consists of a kind of "guerrilla" warfare, involving skirmishes by patrols constantly seeking to chart enemy positions.

France was aided by early winter floods. Heavy rains, which sent the Blies River out of its banks and washed out bridges east of Saarbruecken, contributed to the natural strength of positions established by the French.

Luxemburgers Warned

Paris, Oct. 23 (INS). Reports reaching Paris tonight from Luxemburg said border populations facing France and Germany have been warned to prepare for evacuation at any moment."

Luxemburg civil authorities also indicated they were preparing for the possibility of the rumored German offensive taking a pathway through their country in sweeping attack at outflanking the heaviest French and British defending forces.

Inhabitants of Luxemburg territory along the Moselle Valley fronting on German Siegfried Line fortifications and those opposite French Lorraine were asked to be prepared for evacuation to localities already designated.

Highest Court Bars Short-Cut In Medical Suit

Review Denial Leaves Anti-Trust Case on D. C. Appeals Docket

The United States Supreme Court yesterday refused to review a decision of the District Supreme Court dismissing the Government's anti-trust action against the medical profession.

The case, however, is not ended. The Justice Department pointed out that an appeal was pending before the District Court of Appeals and hearings before that court, it was explained, probably will begin in December.

Refusal to review the case was a definite setback for the department, which had sought to have it given the right-of-way over the general run of cases. It was for this reason that an appeal was taken.

Short Cut Sought

If the request had been granted, it would have ben a short cut to final settlement. As matters stand, however, the case must follow the usual procedure, that is, it must be routed through the District Court of Appeals.

Thus far, Justice James M. Proctor's decision in the District Supreme Court on July 26, dismissing indictments against the American Medical Associaiton, the District Medical Society 16 Washington doctors, 5 other physicians and 2 other medical bodies still stands.

The case is based on a complaint that the medical organizations and individual doctors conspired to restrain trade by boycotting and taking coercive measures against Group Health Association, Inc., a co-operative forme dto provide medical care to Government employes in Washington on a prepayment basis.

Court Didn't Explain

From a legal standpoint, however, this gave rise to the question whether the medical profession could be classed as a "trade." Justice Proctor held that it was a profession, not a trade, and that the Sherman antitrust act, forbidding trade restraints, was not involved.

The Justice Department had sought to appeal directly to the highest tribunal because of importance of the case. Department attorneys said the ultimate decision would "affect the conditions of medical practice throughout the United States."

It was for this reason that Thurman Arnold, Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust cases, has considered the case one of the most important in the department's antimonopoly campaign.

The Supreme Court did not say why it was refusing to review the case. It simply listed the anti-trust action against the medical profession among a number of cases, and said that petitions for writs of certiorari in these cases were "severally denied."

No Bearing on Merits

The Justice Department commented that the court's action "has no bearing whatsoever on the merits of the case."

"The court only adhered to precedent," the department said, "in refusing to take jjurisdiction under such circumstances except where cases involving similar questions already are pending before the court or where some outstanding constitutional issue is presented."

A practice of taking "short cuts" to the Supreme Court from decisions by Federal district courts has grown up as a result of the demand for speeding up final rulings on the constitutionality of important New Deal legislation.

The Supreme Court may or may not agree to review the case after the District Court of Appeals has acted. If it should then refuse to review the case, the decision of the Court of Appeals would be final.

Soviet Demanded Land, Turks Say

circles "Turkey's Bessarabia." Bessarabia is Rumania's eastern province seized from Russia during the Soviet civil wars and which the U. S. S. R. is expected to claim anew in the near future.

The Soviet demand for the Kars-Ardahan territory, which now appears to have been the chief reason for the collapse of the Soviet-Turkish negotiations, was viewed by some observers as part of a far-reaching Russian program to drive southward to the Persian Gulf and thereby gain access to the Arabian Sea and India.

The region was formerly part of old Armenia. It is inhabited by people who speak a strange mixture of Russian and Turkish.

It is geographically important because it stands between the Soviet Caucasus and Iraq and Iran, which border on the Persian Gulf. The Anglo-French-Turkish pact apparently aims to block Soviet expansion southward through this region.

Corinne Griffith Loses Appeal In High Court for Tax Refund

CORINNE MARSHALL

Mrs. Corinne Griffith Marshall, wife of George Preston Marshall, owner of the Washington Redskins, and a noted star of the silent films, yesterday lost her appeal to the United States Supreme Court for an income tax refund of $23,275.58, which she claimed she overpaid for 1930.

The court refused to review a decision of the Court of Claims last March denying the refund.

The case was the outgrowth of uncertainty on the part of the Bureau of Internal Revenue as to whether the community property laws of California and eight other States superseded, for tax purposes, agreements between husband and wife as to the division of income.

In 1930 Mrs. Marshall was the wife of Walter Mitchell Morosco, screen producer, whom she divorced at Juarez, Mexico, in May, 1934. Morosco and the motion picture star, on November 30, 1927, entered into agreement whereby all propert yacquired by either would be the sole and separate property of the party acquiring it.

Mrs. Marshall earned $263,821 in 1930 and Morosco $60,000. If they had lumped their incomes under the California community property law, each would have had $171,000 legal income and would have owed a tax of $32,000.

Acting in accordance with the 1927 agreement, however, Mrs. Marshall listed he rincome separately and paid a tax of $55,442.91, and Morosco paid $6,754.07, the amount due on his income.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue at first ruled that taxes should have been paid on the basis of the community property law, regardless of the personal agreement. As a result, he computed overassessment in favor of Mrs. Marshal of $25,275.58, and a deficiency against Morosco, of $24,955.94, with interest of $6,046.86.

Demand for payment was served on Morosco, but no part, according to Supreme Court records, has been paid. Mrs. Marshall, in response to a telegram from the Internal Revenue Bureau, filed claim for refund in the amount specified on June 14 1933.

Thereafter, the internal revenue commissioner changed his mind. A certificate of overassessment in favor of Mrs. Marshall was cancelled. She was informed in October, 1935, that the refund would not be made.

The action of the Supreme Court yesterday operated, in effect, to sustain the second thought of the commissioner, alread- upheld by the court in previous cases.

The Supreme Court adjourned until November 6, when it will deliver the first decisions of the winter term.

Germany Awaits Ribbentrop Talk

Berlin that such efforts are under way.

Deny Peace Emissary

The semiofficial news agency, D N. B., tonight denied rumors abroad that former Belgian Premier Paul Van Zeeland is carrying special German terms for peace to President Roosevelt.

"Whether Van Zeeland knows the terms of the Allies," the D. N. B. denial says, "we do not know. So far as the German terms are concerned they can only involve the rejected principles set forth by Chancellor Hitler in his Reichstag speech October 6."

It was announced tonight that Lieut. Gen. Hiroshi Oshima, the Japanese ambassador, has been recalled. Oshima is to be replaced with Saburo Kurusu, ambassador to Brussels.

Oshima has been Japanese ambassador here since October, 1938, but since 1934, he had been a military attache in Berlin.

He is well known, before the signing of the Russo-German nonaggression pact, to have been an ardent proponent of closer collaboration between the Axis powers, particularly in military matters.

People Reported Queried

[Hitler was represented in semi-official French dispatches to be sounding out opinion among the German people to learn whether they would support a smashing offensive on the Western Front, which might prove costly in lives, the United Press said.

[These soundings, it was said in French circles, were the chief topic at the week-end gathering in Berlin of Nazi Party district leaders from throughout the Reich and their conferences with Hitler, Goering and Deputy Party Leader Hess.

[It was considered Von Ribbentrop's speech might reveal the government's decision on the basis of these soundings.

[Other possibilities were that the Nazi foreign minister would announce plans for disposition of Poland, or that he might discuss Nazi-Soviet relations.—Editor's note.]

Another day of quiet on the Western Front was reported in a high command communique, which said there was no fighting "excepting artillery and reconnoitering activity."

British Plane Seen

The communique reported a British plane had flown over the railway station at Konzen, about 15 miles southeast of Aachen, on October 21 and then turned over the Belgian frontier.

A campaign to consolidate the "home front"—where many Germans believe the last war was lost—was launched by the Nazi party as part of the political drive usually made in the winter months.

Munitions and other factory workers were being told at a series of meetings that they stand in the first line with field troops. Housewives were being urged to bear hardships with the same determination as soldiers and to save on everything down to the simplest necessities.

Social Agencies To Study Baby Broker Ban

Other Child Welfare Legislation Also on Tomorrow's Agenda

Efforts on behalf of three pieces of child welfare legislation, one of which would banish the "baby broker" from the District, will be discussed at the first fall meeting of the child welfare division of the Council of Social Agencies at 12:15 p. m. tomorrow at the E street Y. W. C. A.

The legislation, which the division considers vital, includes:

Authorization for the Board of Public Welfare to care for dependent children without court commitment. Such a law would permit the board to handle cases of short-time dependency until a family could get on its feet. In cases of an unmarried mother, the child could be cared for until she could get a job. As the situation now stands, the child must go to court and custody must be transferred to the court, thus detaching the child from its parents.

A licensing law for all child caring agencies and individuals. This would ban activities of the "baby broker." The Corporation Counsel's office has already drawn up such a bill at the request of the commissioners.

A new law dealing with problems of the unmarried mother, to replace the bastardy law of 1912. Under the law that is being sought, a case work service for the unmarried mother would be set up, with provisions allowing adjustments to be made and permitting the father to acknowledge paternity, in place of first issuing a warrant for the man as under present law.

The division's legislative committee, of which Mrs. Louis Ottenberg is chairman, will lead the discussion of steps to obtain congressional action on the legislation.

Jordon Jury GivenD.C.Code, Court Told

Upperman Provided Copy, Member of Venire Testifies

Eight jurors and a former deputy marshal today are scheduled to tell Chief Justice Wheat what they know about alleged irregularities in the jury room when Thomas Jordon, 38, was condemned to death for the Garden T Shoppe holdup murder of eight years ago.

Doomed five years after the crime, Jordon won a commutation to life imprisonment and now seeks a new trial. His attorney, James J. Laughlin, charges that former Deputy United States Marshal John B. Upperman unlawfully gave the jurors legal information while they were deliberating Jordon's guilt.

Juror Israel F. Good, now a Philadelphia printing machine salesman, testified yesterday that he asked for more instructions about the law of the case and that Upperman brought the jurors a copy of the District code, which several of the jurors consulted. Two others examined the book on their way to eat, Good said.

Chief Justice Wheat indicated that it was improper for the jury to have the code in the jury room.

Justice Letts, who presided at Jordon's trial, left his bench in the civil branch of the District Court, to become a witness before Chief Justice Wheat. He said he remembered no details of the trial, but that he was "quite sure" that he did not send the jurors any code to read.

Juror Francis L. Goodwin, collection manager, of 948 Shepherd street northwest, was the man Good said asked for the code. Goodwin testified that he did not remember any code being brought to the jury room.

Juror Richard Everett, haberdasher, of 649 South Carolina avenue southeast, testified that there was no code in the jury room. He said he and another juror did consult a code outside the room, as Good had said, but that this did not happen until the Jordon verdict had been delivered and the trial was over.

3 More U-Boats Sunk.British Claim

this part of the war have been very favorable from our point of view," the communique stated.

In an account of the bombing of the Nazi U-boat in the North Sea, the pilot described how the submarine dived immediately after British bombs were dropped ahead of the periscope.

"The air gunner," he continued, "said definitely that he noted a second underwater explosion after the explosion of these bombs. The aircraft then turned about, flew over the submarine the second time, and dropped a second salvo. Patches of oil were observed after the first salvo, and more extensively after the second attack. Nothing more was seen of the U-boat."

The second U-boat was bombed by a British Atlantic patrol aircraft. Soon after the bombs were dropped, dark objects and air bubbles rose to the surface of the water, the pilot of this plane said. The submarine was not seen again after the attack.

The story of the sinking by a British warship of the third U-boat was told tonight by Robert Whelan, of Swansea, Wales. A member of the crew of a Bristol merchant ship which the submarine had attacked when she was three days outward bound for the United States. The merchantman and the U-boat fought for almost an hour and both vessels were damaged, he related, when two British warships appeared on the scene. As the merchantman was being escorted back to Bristol, he said, the U-boat was sighted again, and this time it was sunk by one of the escorts.

It was disclosed officially tonight also that a whole convoy of merchant ships in the North Sea was saved from disaster by a squadron of British planes which, in reconnaissance work, spotted drifting enemy mines. By dropping smoke flares and flashing lamp signals, the byers gave warning in time for the vessels to change their course. Some of the mines were destroyed by machine gun fire from one of the destroyers.

The Firth of Forth had its fifth air raid warning today, owing the air ministry said, to the approach of unidentified aircraft. The "all clear" signal, however, was given half an hour later, and no enemy planes were seen.

No official information has been available to support the repeated reports from Denmark of violent naval action off the coast of Jutland. Naval circles advanced the theory that exploding mines were the origin of the reports.

The Federal Diary

U. S. to Picture Health Needs, Activities in Official Movie

By Alfred Friendly

Two new feature-length documentary films that their makers hope will rank with the phenomenally successful "The River" and "The Plow that Broke the Plains," are being produced by Pare Lorentz and the United States Film Service. The first, "Fight for Life," dealing with childbirth and health problems in the slums, is due for release before the end of the year.

The second picture, probably to be released early next year, is "Ecce Homo," the long-discussed film about industrial unemployment.

In addition, the Film Service is working on two short pictures, one for the Rural Electrification Administration showing how electricity has been brought to the farm, and one for the Department of Agriculture, a study in dramatic form of soils and fertility.

Spanish Films Planned

Even bigger projects, however, are being planned for which funds will be asked of Congress next session. They entail the production of two full-length films as part of the Administration's drive for closer cultural relations with the Latin-American republics, growing out of the Lima conference. One of the features, descriptive of the United States, will be filmed here and scored in Spanish and Portuguese for distribution in South America. The other will be made in South America for showing here.

In addition, the film service hopes to rescore in Spanish and Portuguese six existing films, privately made, of technical and scientific developments in this country for distribution from Mexico south.

Those who have seen the "rushes" on "Fight for Life" proclaim that Lorentz, gifted producer of the Government's other two box-office record-breakers, has outdone himself in a dramatization of the problems presented in a few chapters of Dr. Paul de Kruif's recent book by that name.

As distinct from "The River" and "The Plow," the new picture relies on human actors instead of water, wind, dykes and soil. Much of it has been filmed in Chicago's famous Maternity Center, where doctors and nurses, social workers and ambulance drivers, fight against heavy odds to bring healthy new life from a sick environment.

The villains of the piece are slums and tenements and poverty; the hero is medical science. The moral, as in the other two pictures, is that the problem is a national one, to be met in part by governmental action—relief, more adequate public health facilities, slum clearance.

Only the background for "Ecce Homo" has been filmed, showing where America's urban workers earn their living, how they do it. Some of the scenes of spectacular industrial processes have been described in superlative terms. Camras are now in the field, filming the human relationships involved—the unemployed worker and his search for a job.

Isn't This Why You Are Constipated?

What do you eat for breakfast? Coffee, toast, maybe some eggs? What do you eat for lunch and dinner? White bread, meat, potatoes? It's little wonder you're constipated. You probably don't eat enough "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean the amount you eat. It's a kind of food that forms a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines and helps a movement. If this is your trouble, may we suggest a crunchy toasted cereal—Kellogg's All-Bran—for breakfast. All-Bran is a natural food, not a medicine—but it's particularly rich in "bulk." Being so, it can help you not only to get regular but to keep regular. You won't have to endure constipation, you can avoid it. Eat All-Bran daily, drink plenty of water, and life will be brighter for you! Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek.

DOCTORS WARN FOLKS WHO ARE CONSTIPATED

IT IS SAID constipation causes many human discomforts—headaches, lack of energy and mental dullness being but a few. BUT DON'T WORRY—

For years a noted Ohio Doctor, Dr. F. M. Edwards, successfully treated scores of patients for constipation with his famous Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—now sold by druggists everywhere.

Olive Tablets, being purely vegetable, are wonderful! They not only gently yet thoroughly cleanse the bowels but ALSO assist liver bile flow to help digest fatty foods. Test their goodness TONIGHT without fail! 15¢, 30¢, 60¢.

A Proper Setback

At some future date the Supreme Court may find it desirable to review the Government's anti-trust case against the American Medical Association and the District Medical Society. The Department of Justice appears determined to fight Judge Proctor's decision to the last ditch. And the medical profession would certainly carry the dispute to the Supreme Court if the Proctor opinion should be overruled in the Court of Appeals.

For the present, however, the Supreme Court has quite properly declined to review the case. It sees no reason for departure from the customary judicial procedure. No constitutional issue is involved in the charges against the Medical Association. The case turns merely upon interpretation of the anti-trust laws. The Department of Justice is attempting to stretch the Sherman act to provide protection for the Group Health Association against alleged restraints on the part of the organized medical profession.

Should the Supreme Court set a precedent of accepting appeals directly from the Federal district courts, where no constitutional issue is involved, it would soon be overburdened with litigation. The statute giving constitutional cases a right of way to the highest tribunal makes it all the more important for the court to maintain a rigid check on other petitions for review of less vital or complicated issues.

There are many indications that the anti-trust division has been unduly excited over the idea of prosecuting the Medical Association for alleged restraint of trade. In effect, the Supreme Court has sustained this criticism. It found nothing in the anti-trust division's petition to justify singling out this case for special attention. If the division insists upon clinging to its strained interpretation of the anti-trust laws, it will at least have to rely upon the customary procedure for final judicial clarification.

The Falklands Flare-Up

The mutually advantageous commercial and financial relations which Argentina has long enjoyed with Great Britain have tended to obscure, though never wholly to eliminate, a century-old grievance which the South American republic has nurtured against the British. That grievance concerns the ownership of the Falkland Islands, which lie some 200 miles east of Patagonia and strategically command the Straits of Magellan.

The British have been in continuous occupation of those islands since 1833, although their claim of ownership goes back to 1765. The Argentinians argue, however, that sovereignty over the Falklands had not been abandoned by Spain. They insist that ownership of the islands passed to the Argentine republic from the Spanish crown. Successive governments at Buenos Aires have thus taken the position that Britain's position in the Falklands is that of a usurper.

Most of the time the Falkland Islands question has lain dormant. Regardless of their resentment against Britain's occupation, the Argentinians have never been willing to make the issue a casus belli. After all, the British have been their best customers as well as their bankers.

In the minds of many Argentinians, however, the present war has given their nation a golden opportunity to raise the issue anew. Not only are they moved by the basic grievances arising out of what they consider an act of force majeure by the British a hundred and six years ago, but they are also disturbed by the fact that Great Britain gives evidence of seeking to use the Falkland Islands as a base for naval operations in the South Atlantic.

Remembering that one of the outstanding naval battles of the World War was fought in the vicinity of the Falkland Islands and thus in uncomfortable proximity to the Argentine mainland, they are fearful that history may repeat itself. Reasons of security, as well as the memory of what they deem an historic wrong, are prompting them to add fuel to the never-dead embers of an ancient dispute. And the fact that Great Britain, despite its war needs, is proving a disappointing market for Argentine beef and wheat, while preventing Argentine products from reaching the German market, has certainly not operated to reduce this bitterness.

What the outcome of the latest agitation over the islands will be is impossible to say. Their economic value is slight; their strategic importance in British eyes remains considerable. But the resurgence of this dispute does prove how difficult it is to confine the repercussions of a war to the continent where it originates.

Russian Gold

The British government gives credence to reports that Russia recently shipped about $17,000,000 worth of gold to Germany, to be used by the latter country to finance the purchase of war materials abroad. And British officials are understandably concerned over the prospect of this kind of cooperation between Germany and Russia.

While $17,000,000 is a small sum in the total trade balance of a great nation, that amount of gold would enable Germany to buy abroad without the necessity of exporting goods to provide the means of payment. In time of war cash reserves of this kind enable a country to husband its resources for domestic use, and make it a more formidable opponent. Hence the British and French have good cause to worry over any development that would ease the financial strain upon Germany.

Moreover, it is well known that Russia is in a position to supply Germany with large amounts of gold if she chooses to do so. The Soviet gold production has been rising rapidly of late years, and although official statistics are deficient the Federal Reserve Board estimates Russian gold output as approximating $180,000,000 in each of the three years, 1936, 1937 and 1938. It is also worth noting that $315,000,000 of Russian gold was shipped to Great Britain during the two years, 1937 and 1938.

Although many Americans do not realize it, our gold policies are chiefly responsible for the rapid rise in world gold production which followed our action in devaluing the dollar and jumping the price of gold to $35 per ounce. Thereafter gold production throughout the world, Russia included, began to mount. And since we stand ready to receive gold in unlimited quantities at a fixed price the metal becomes the more important for nations like Russia and Germany, which use it simply as a commodity in exchange for useful goods.

Since the dollar was devaluated, the United States has acquired over $10,000,000,000 of gold. In exchange we have surrendered valuable goods and given foreigners valuable claims against our productive wealth. It is not surprising, therefore, that in spite of the breakdown of the gold standard, belligerents and neutrals alike are eager to gain possession of a metal that can be exchanged directly or indirectly for dollar balances and the things that dollar balances can buy.

Our readiness to take gold is already profoundly affecting the conduct of the war in Europe. And if this Government should undertake to stem an unwanted gold inflow by lowering the price of gold, or banning its importation, that, too, would have a profound effect upon the course and outcome of the war. Incidentally it would create new and difficult domestic problems to replace the very serious ones that now beset us.

Germany has learned how to get along with next to no gold. The United States has not yet discovered a better utilization for too much gold than burial in underground vaults.

Oedipus Or Eros?

A favorite exercise of both amateur and professional psychologists these days is the long-distance exploration of Herr Hitler's psyche. It is pretty generally understood that his psyche is in very much less than perfect repair, but there is some disagreement as to the precise nature of the damage. Anyhow, the Fuehrer has been variously diagnosed as an hysteric, an infantile adult, a manic depressive and a victim of anxiety neurosis.

Perhaps these disorders are not mutually exclusive. The eminent Dr. William Brown, of Oxford University, now detects in Herr Hitler simultaneous evidences of hysteria, persecutory mania, compulsion psychosis and Messianic megalomania. All this, it appears, adds up to a perfect case of paranoia. In a recent letter to the London Times Dr. Brown declares the reports by Sir Neville Henderson of his final interviews with the chancellor on the eve of war clinch the case for paranoia once and for all. He mentions in particular Herr Hitler's "mood of extreme excitability" and his "violent, recriminatory and extravagant" language.

Moreover, it seems that Dr. Brown has been doing a little investigation into the etiology of Herr Hitler's madness. It is, he says, the product of defective heredity plus the unhappy early environment suggested in "Mein Kampf." If Hitler's relationship with his parents had been less tragic, Dr. Brown thinks, the recent history of the world would have been less tragic too. England would still have the Royal Oak and only Mr. Dies and a few others would be looking under their beds at night for Comrade Stalin. Old Oedipus, therefore, is the real villain in the piece.

However, it is significant that Sir Neville seems to attach much more historical importance to Gen. von Blomberg's romance with a carpenter's daughter than to the infant Hitler's fixation on his mother. Without any disrespect to Dr. Brown, we hope that he is wrong and Sir Neville is right. If the world has to be lost, we should much rather see it lost for love than for an oedipus complex.

Fraudulent Passports

Earl Browder's indictment on a charge of false application for a passport apparently stems from his testimony before the Dies committee. The usefulness of that committee's investigation into un-American activities, in so far as it is confined to exposure of factual information, has thus once more been demonstrated.

While pretending to believe in "democratic processes," Mr. Browder admitted to the Dies committee that he and other members of the Communist Party in this country have traveled abroad on passports bearing fictitious names. In other words, he stooped to methods of the underworld to promote the interests of a party that is allied with a revolutionary foreign regime. By such conduct he has effectively unmasked the organization which he heads and exposed himself to justified prosecution.

One can scarcely avoid a feeling of satisfaction that Mr. Browder's undemocratic methods are thus leading to his own undoing. But that fact should not influence the Department of Justice in its investigation of passport frauds. The law forbidding use of fictitious passports should be rigorously enforced for its own sake, without regard to the political beliefs of those who violate it. The current investigation should extend beyond the ranks of the Communist Party and include any and all groups suspected of using American passports for illegitimate purposes.

Fortunately, the Department of State has already moved to tighten up the restrictions upon the issuance of passports. It is reported that the fingerprints of persons desiring to travel abroad under protection of the United States will be taken to facilitate the detection of fraud. At the same time, efforts are being made to withdraw as many passports as possible from active use.

Only in this way is the use of forged passports likely to be minimized or stopped. While these new regulations are being worked out and put into effect, however, the spies, agents of foreign governments and others seeking to disguise their identity while traveling abroad under protection of the United States should be taught, by vigorous prosecutions, that our love of liberty does not condone lawlessness.

Not Irreconcilable

Last Sunday's Gallup poll provided a highly illuminating indication of the trend of American public opinion regarding the foreign policy which the United States should pursue at the present time.

In the first place, the poll suggests that a vast majority of Americans want this Nation to stay out of the European war. Of those questioned by the Institute of Public Opinion, 95 per cent favored such a course. At the same time, the poll indicated that more than four out of every five want Great Britain and France to win, with three out of every five favoring American assistance to the Allies in every way short of active American participation in the conflict.

From these figures it is apparent that the basic issue before Congress and the Administration is how to reconcile American aid to the Allies with the certain preservation of American peace. Some argue that these aims are, in fact, irreconcilable. The Gallup poll suggests, however, that a large majority of Americans think otherwise. The presumption is that they see no distinction between selling arms and selling foodstuffs, raw materials, automobiles and the other thousand and one articles not prohibited by the present law.

Certainly, few now assume that the sale of commodities in the non-prohibited category will get us into war, although the British blockade makes that trade one-sided. American public opinion, as reflected in the Gallup poll is, therefore, wholly logical in desiring the United States to stay out of war while favoring the repeal of the present arms embargo.

The main reason why this country is in such a confused state politically is because a large number of voters wear empty hats to the polls.

It stacks up about like this: An optimist has no money, and a pessimist won't lend you any.

"A tax on political oratory would balance the budget," declares a paragrapher. Not if it were an ad valorem tax.

The cost of living continues to mount, but you don't have to keep on doing it if you can help it.

Washington Parks

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In 25 years residence I have never seen Washington's down-town public parks in such a deplorable state.

Dupont Circle, Washington Circle, the West End triangles,—even Lafayette Square—and similar areas which once were beauty spots of careful gardening are now virtually nothing except weed patches or dry barren ground.

Who is responsible for this condition of affairs? Three years ago a $2,000,000 fund was expended on a so-called parks rehabilitation program. Since then apparently nothing has been spent on their maintenance.

Mr. C. Marshall Finnan, at that time, stated to the Mid-City Citizens Association, in reply to a question, that he "might have concentrated on maintenance" but that he had certain ideas for changes in the parks that he preferred to carry out.

As a result of these changes not only were areas of grass, shrubbery and flowers destroyed and their spaces filled with concrete and cement but roots of valuable trees were chopped off, such as the magnificent and famous copper beech of Lafayette Square, which is now dead on its feet.

Once more it would seem that maintenance and not further uprooting and chopping down is the crying need of our parks.

With droves of unemployed, may I suggest that a small army could be put usefully and permanently to work at weeding, seeding, watering, planting and cleaning our rundown, disgracefully unkempt and neglected public reservations.

Or have we all become so completely munitions-minded that we can think of no other ways of "making work" except a boom in armaments?

In Defense Of Lindbergh

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is about time we in the United States become pro-American.

Lindbergh has served England and the United States well by telling them what he knows of German preparedness. This proves he is no pro-Nazi. He wants us to wake up and get prepared.

As for Canada, I too think that if anything ever happened to England from communism (it will not be from nazism), Canada would do well to join with the United States. We are all the same people and we must stick together, in the future war against communism when it comes.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been a daily reader of The Post for many years. I think it is time for you to stop the dissemination of such inflammable stuff as Dorothy Thompson is writing against Col. Charles A. Lindbergh. Dorothy Thompson makes no attempt to answer the logic and soundness of Lindbergh's position.

These intemperate and inflammable articles do much to jeopardize the close friendship long enjoyed between this country and our good neighbor, Canada. I think you ought not be a party to such an unfortunate incident.

Reply To Senator La Follette

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Hitler's government by terror, his mania for conquest, and his progress in forcing upon the world totalitarian armament, are now much better known than in 1935 or 1937, and many Americans of German descent have turned against him. But leading Senators from States infested by German, Irish and Italian voters are fighting to retain the change in the rules which they put over in 1937, to make stricter our anti-British shipping restrictions.

For example, Senator La Follette (Congressional Record, October 12, 28 columns) urges that we retain the arms embargo and make the shipping provisions stricter, thus aiding the German design of starving the English out. Of course he doesn't openly support Hitler. He even says the survival of the British Empire is "far preferable to us," i. e., in our interest. But he vigorously attacks the British and the French, directly and by the innuendo of questions.

While not defending Hitler openly, the Senator implies that British and French resistance to Hitler's conquest of Europe is a mere "vagary," as they "go about the world forcing their systems upon every nation!" He caricatures European postwar history, omitting the scaling down of reparations, the return of the Saar, and the whole Locarno policy.

He misrepresents American policy in regard to Manchuria and Ethiopia. He says our own government had given all possible indication of its desire to stop or delay oil shipments to Italy. He should have said that the executive had tried moral suasion, but the Senate isolationists stood ready as always to block any law to "name the aggressor" or "meddle in Europe." Thus he blames the English for not relying on the United States to do something similar to what he is now opposing.

Neither the pages which he cites, nor any others in Secretary Stimson's book, "The Far Eastern Crisis," show that Hoover's administration was willing to consider more drastic steps against Japan than moral condemnation. The British government did, indeed, after five months, refuse to follow Stimson in sending another futile note to Japan.

But there was no evidence, there is no evidence, that an isolationist President and an isolationist Senate were prepared to abandon words and proceed to economic or other pressure, even if Great Britain led the way. Unfortunately, many read Stimson's book very carelessly. The United States did lead in berating Japan with words; but as for acts, the United States not only did not lead, but would give no assurance of support if Britain led.

The British may be criticized for many things, and some of us are entitled to criticize them for lack of zeal in upholding collective security; but assuredly these isolationists, who kept the United States out of the League of Nations and at every turn have opposed and are opposing action to penalize the war-makers, have unmitigated gall when they criticize the English for not taking on the job of policing the world without the support of the world's outstanding power—or even (as in the present case, if the isolationists have their way) with its economic opposition.

No Relief For Refugees

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There is unconscious irony, to me, in the President's recommendation to the Intergovernmental Committee on Political Refugees, which in the year and a half of its existence has accomplished precisely nothing, that in addition to the problem of the German refugees, whose sufferings have been not one whit abated by any action on the part of the committee, it prepare also to deal with the 10 or 20 million refugees whom the present war is likely to produce.

If this committee can do nothing for 200,000 refugees in a year and a half, how many years will it require to do nothing for 20,000,000 refugees?

We are, as a Nation, composed in a large measure of the descendants of those who fled from religious or political oppression in the Old World. Shall we, with our limitless resources and our vast unsettled areas, deny shelter to the very type of person who helped found our country?

Opponents of measures to admit the victims of Nazi tyranny to this country protest that they would become public charges, since they were stripped of all their possessions before they were allowed to leave Germany. This is not the case, for various charitable organizations in this country have volunteered to pay all the costs of transporting them here and are willing to undertake that they will not become public charges.

It is further objected that our immigration quota from Germany is exhausted for the next five years. But is the immigration quota an immutable law of nature? Congress established it; Congress can also modify it, when it is a case literally of saving thousands of human lives and of admitting to our shores people who have suffered and bled for the very principles upon which our Nation is established.

When this republic was founded, it was our boast that it should be "a refuge for the oppressed of all nations." Shall we retract those proud words?

JOHN T. APPLEBY.

"Fellow Travelers"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Congratulations on the finest editorial of the year—your editorial on "Fellow Travelers." You are to be commended on your logical presentation of the simple fact that organizations with some or many analogous aims are not necessarily identical groups or bodies with all identical goals. Mr. Dies should be required to memorize the column.

Mr. Dies apparently scans the platforms of all liberal organizations and compares the listed aims with those of the Communist party. If he finds a single item on the liberal organization's platform that coincides with one in the Communist platform he perforce concludes that the liberal organization is "communistic" or "dominated by Communists." The sophistry within this reasoning presents its own confutation to an intelligent person.

However, the average person does not have the time to follow matters carefully. From day to day he reads headlines: "Dies Links Lawyers Guild with Communists," or "American League for Peace and Democracy Accused of Communism," etc. Repetition of thought, as in language, causes elision, and the reader soon associates the Lawyers' Guild and communism together without the usual "links," "alleged" or "accused."

The result of the process is a challenge to all champions of civil rights and liberties. For, should it continue, there will soon come a day when church groups may fear to adopt resolutions condemning vice and destitution because the Communist Party is already on record against sin and poverty.

The Post Impressionist

Soup And The Demon Rum

They sit and glare at each other from opposite sides of the room, with the bland and forthright intolerance which is the inalienable right of the very young and the very old. I bear with their quarreling patiently, for I am fond of both, but I am glad for the sanctity of my home that they are not, after all, animate creatures, but merely an ancient rum bottle and my great-grandmother's soup tureen.

The rum bottle basks in a sunny window like a tipsy old man who is steady only when he is full. I dare not let him remain empty for long, as he would rock and reel and topple from his place if it were not for his ballast of liquid. It is just as well that I cannot hear his words when I pour water down his long green throat.

Upon the piano across the room, flanked by a decorous pair of candlesticks, Great-grandmother's soup tureen sits in judgment on the old rake in the south window. She cannot understand this new generation, which permits such a baleful influence to remain in the family circle, thinking perhaps of the prim derelictions of her day, when a mere wine glass was a sight to set a lady blushing. Ah, this modern world, she sighs, where a soup tureen—the final expression of respectability—must bear silently the humiliating presence of a devotee of rum!

Just which great-grandmother was the original owner of the soup tureen is a mystery, with the key held only by myself. When relatives on the distaff side come to call I say that she belonged to my father's grandmother; when paternal kinsfolk pay me a visit I remark that she once graced the table of my mother's forebears. And when I depart from truth she eyes me sadly; it does not please her that my fibs stem from an affectionate regard—and the determination that she will continue to grace my piano. I have a sneaking feeling that she would much prefer to shake off the dust of my doubtful housekeeping and take up her abode with the rest of the family heirlooms.

But I owe it to my children to keep her, as a constant and gentle rebuke to our flippant modern ways. the smallness of my family grieves her, for she remembers the long, expanding tables of her youth, when 10, 12 or 15 people were fed from her steaming depths. She has no patience with these silly bouillon cups, for how can children thrive and men grow mellow over a mere thimbleful? She knows nothing of the existence of canned soups; the very thought would be enough to send her toppling to the floor, where she would crash into a thousand pieces of heart-broken china.

Considering the change in ideas and appetites, it is much better that she end her days with the broad expanse of her bosom covered with flowers. Sometimes she rebels at her uselessness, but in her heart she knows that it is her mission to bring all the gentility she can to this brazen age. If, by holding our roses instead of our soups, she can bring beauty into being, her mission is clear. Did not the bread of St. Elizabeth change into roses?

And thus she wears her age like a crown, and the pure flowing lines of her urn-shaped bowl have a graciousness that we should mark and copy. She is reconciled to her place on the piano, and as a concession to her love of service, I sometimes let her hold fruit instead of flowers—small shining red apples and deep purple plums and tumbling green grapes. When the children pass by and take from her bounty, she seems almost content except for the grating presence of the big green rum bottle.

She will probably never be entirely at ease in his company, but will go on setting her good example. What woman can resist the urge to be an uplifting influence?

If she knew it, the rum bottle regards her with a disdain second only to that she feels for him. Their antagonism is a matter of values, after all—ideologies, we say in these days. She looks back through endless vistas of family dinners, but he can doze in the sun and dream of Spain, and of a voyage in the snug hold of a ship bound for the West Indies. He can remember his first glimpse of the islands, where life was warm and lusty and keyed to his own brand of good cheer. Perhaps he remembers, too, the days and nights in Havana—sleepy days and wild brawling nights.

After he gave up his last drop of rum, he led a useful life. The Gulf fishermen liked his capacity and used him as a water bottle for their boats. He likes to think of all the fish he had a part in catching—tarpon and pompano and jewfish, and great monsters of turtles. Little green islands stud his memory, and he sometimes sighs for a glimpse of the incredible turquoise water that lapped around them.

The first time I saw him, he was reeling in the doorway of a little marine curio shop in Key West, happy in the company of fish nets, trays of sharks' teeth, sea biscuits and conch shells. Up and down the street magenta bouganvillea and vines with large fantastic leaves festooned themselves along the galleries of the old white houses. Perhaps I should have left him where he was, but I wanted to hear his yarns.

And now he sits in my sunny window, the antithesis of the genteel soup tureen and all she represents. But some morning I expect to find them side by side. He might even be holding her flowers, like the gay old dog he is. It would be strange if she should become a punch bowl.

Conflicting Wishes

By Mark Sullivan

American Feeling

SOON AFTER the war in Europe began, this column said that American feeling could be expressed in two conditions. The statement then made has been confirmed approximately by several evidences:

"(a) About nine out of ten Americans want Britain and France to win.

"(b) About nine out of ten Americans want America to stay out of the war."

These two conditions do not fit together. They conflict, and their conflict accounts for much of our national strain. Entertaining two incompatible wishes accounts for much of the individual strain in the world. When the condition is extreme it sometimes leads to mental confusion so great as to be pathological. The question whether America can retain its poise about the war depends much upon our ability to carry along these two conflicting wishes in water-tight compartments. This is going to be difficult. For many individuals it will be impossible.

The first wish, that Britain and France win, is likely to remain static. The number who wish that way is not likely to diminish. No one who now wishes Britain and France to win is likely to change and wish Germany to win. Nine out of ten Americans wishing Britain and France to win is likely to be the permanent state of the national mind.

War May Follow Napoleonic Pattern

CERTAINLY THIS is true so long as the line-up of the war continues to be what it now is. It must never be forgotten, as at least a possibility, that this war may follow the pattern of the Napoleonic wars. During the some 15 years of the Napoleonic convulsion, there were several brief interruptions, marked by illusory peace agreements. From the beginning to the end, one country after another changed sides; countries changed from participation to neutrality, and vice versa.

Similarly, in the present situation, no one can know about Italy, for example. It is conceivable, as the war goes on, that Italy may part of the time be neutral, part of the time a participant. If the war is prolonged for years, if it continues to bring forth surprises, such as the union of Germany and Russia, it is supposable that Italy may be a participant first on one side, then on the other. The same may be said of Japan, and of some smaller nations. This may seem fantastic now. But with the dictatorships double-crossing and two-timing each other all over the lot, we may see some weird bed-fellowships. And some present fellowships may be brief.

Some changes of line-up might affect American opinion. But so far as any one can foresee now, American emotion is likely to continue the same, about nine out of ten wishing Britain and France to win.

But the other American wish may change in strength. The present proportion, nine out of ten, wishing America to remain out, may diminish. A month from now it may be only eight out of ten who wish America to stay out; six months from now, only seven out of ten.

In this possibility lies danger. But we had best consider it. It is a real possibility. It may be brought about by various developments not now foreseen.

For example, some two weeks ago, America passed through a period that was dangerous to a degree realized by very few—except some silently anxious Navy officials. The head of the German navy had warned our Government that an American ship, the Iroquois, carrying several hundred American passengers, might be sunk. President Roosevelt, as soon as he received the warning, did what he had to do—sent a convoy of naval vessels to accompany the Iroquois from mid-ocean to the United States.

SUPPOSE, DURING the four days the convoy was accompanying the Iroquois, a submarine had poked up its periscope in the neighborhood. It might be one of those submarines that are reported from time to time off our Atlantic Coast. Conceivably it might belong to Germany or it might belong to a neutral nation. Conceivably the submarine might have no intention of harming the Iroquois. But the officers of the American naval convoy could hardly wait to find out the submarine's intention. Their natural and justifiable impulse would be to fire on that submarine, instantly.

Had that happened, it would have been what the diplomats call an "incident," an incident of the sort which, often repeated, led to our participation in the first World War. Had that incident happened, American thought against getting into this war might have fallen from nine out of ten to eight out of ten, or less. Who can feel sure that such incidents will not occur in this war? Whoever does feel sure, relies more on optimism than on experience.

From the point of view of keeping out of the war, the problem is, can we do anything to make our present overwhelming sentiment binding? Not readily, because the incidents that may change our present sentiment are not within our control.

The best we can hope is that American sentiment will achieve coolness and poise, and preserve those qualities throughout whatever happens. Since the war began, we have made some advance in poise, in immunity against stampede. The deluge of letters upon the Senate, which said, and believed, that repealing the embargo was in effect the same thing as entering the war, has not materially changed either the Senate or public opinion. The number of Senators supporting repeal today is about the same as when the debate began.

Dr. John Dewey on

Nation Must Recreate Early Democracy By Determined Effort

A statement by America's foremost liberal educator and philosopher on the occasion of his eightieth birthday.

UNDER PRESENT circumstances I cannot hope to conceal the fact that I have managed to exist 80 years. Mention of the fact may suggest to you a more important fact—namely, that events of the utmost significance for the destiny of this country have taken place during the past four-fifths of a century, a period that covers more than half of its national life in its present form. For obvious reasons I shall not attempt a summary of even the more important of these events. I refer here to them because of their bearing upon the issue to which this country committed itself when the Nation took shape—the creation of democracy, an issue which is now as urgent as it was 150 years ago when the most experienced and wisest men of the country gathered to take stock of conditions and to create the political structure of a self-governing society.

For the net import of the changes that have taken place in these later years is that ways of life and institutions which were once the natural, almost the inevitable, product of fortunate conditions have now to be won by conscious and resolute effort. Not all the country was in a pioneer state 80 years ago. But it was still, save perhaps in a few large cities, so close to the pioneer stage of American life that the traditions of the pioneer, indeed of the frontier, were active agencies in forming the thoughts and shaping the beliefs of those who were born into its life. In imagination at least the country was still having an open frontier, one of unused and unappropriated resources. It was a country of physical opportunity and invitation. Even so, there was more than a marvelous conjunction of physical circumstances involved in bringing to birth this new Nation. There was in existence a group of men who were capable of readapting older institutions and ideas to meet the situations provided by new physical conditions—a group of men extraordinarily gifted in political inventiveness.

At the present time, the frontier is moral, not physical. The period of free lands that seemed boundless in extent has vanished. Unused resources are now human rather than material. They are found in the waste of grown men and women who are without the chance to work, and in the young men and young women who find doors closed where there was once opportunity. The crisis that 150 years ago called out social and political inventiveness is with us in a form which pute a heavier demand on human creativeness.

We Must Recreate Early Democracy

AT ALL EVENTS this is what I mean when I say that we now have to create by deliberate and determined endeavor the kind of democracy which in its origin 150 years ago was largely a gift of grace, the product of a fortunate combination of circumstances. We have lived for a long time upon the heritage that came to us from the happy conjunction of men and events in an earlier day. The present state of the world is more than a reminder that we have now to put forth every energy of our own to prove worthy of our heritage. It is a challenge to do for the critical and complex conditions of today what the men of an earlier day did for simpler conditions.

If I emphasize that the task can be accomplished only by inventive effort and creative activity, it is in part because the depth of the present crisis is due in considerable part to the fact that for a long period we acted as if our democracy were something that perpetuated itself automatically; as if our ancestors had succeeded in setting up a machine that had solved the problem of perpetual motion in politics. We acted as if democracy were something that took place mainly at Washington and Albany—or some other State capitol—under the impetus of what happened when men and women went to the polls once a year or so—which is a somewhat extreme way of saying that we were in the habit of thinking of democracy as a kind of political mechanism that would work as long as citizens were reasonably faithful in performing political duties.

Of late years we have heard more and more frequently that this is not enough; that democracy is a way of life. This saying gets down to hard pan. But I am not sure that something of the externality of the old idea does not cling to the new and better statement. In any case we can escape from this external way of thinking only as we realize in thought and act that democracy is a personal way of individual life; that it signifies the possession of and continual use of certain attitudes, forming personal character, and determining desire and purpose in all the relations of life. Instead of thinking of our own institutions we have to learn to think of the latter as expressions, projections and extensions of habitually dominant personal attitudes.

Democracy as a personal, an individual, way of life involves nothing fundamentally new. But when applied it puts a new practical meaning in old ideas. Put into effect it signifies that powerful present enemies of democracy can be successfully met only by the creation of personal attitudes in individual human beings, so that we must get over our tendency to think that its defense can be found in any external means whatever, whether military or civil, if they are separated from personal attitudes as deep-seated as to constitute personal character.

A Working Faith In Man Is Needed

DEMOCRACY IS A WAY of life controlled by a working faith in the possibilities of human nature. Belief in the common man is a familiar article in the democratic creed. That belief is without basis and significance save as it means faith in the potentialities of human nature as that nature is exhibited in every human being irrespective of race, color, sex, birth and family, of material or cultural wealth. This faith may be enacted in statutes, but it is only on paper unless it is put in force in the attitudes which human beings display to one another in all the incidents and relations of daily life. To denounce nazism for intolerance, cruelty and stimulation of hatred amounts to fostering of insincerity if, in our personal relations to other persons, if, in our daily walk and conversation, we are moved by racial, color or other class prejudice; indeed, by anything save a generous belief in their possibilities as human beings and hence in the need of providing conditions which will enable these capacities to reach fulfillment. The democratic faith in human equality is belief that every human being, independent of the quantity or range of his personal endowment, has the right to equal opportunity with every other person for development of whatever gifts he has. The democratic belief in the principle of leadership is a generous one. It is universal. It is belief in the capacity of every person to lead his own life free from coercion and imposition by others provided right conditions are supplied.

Democracy is a way of personal life controlled not merely by faith in the capacity of human nature in general but by faith in the capacity of human beings for intelligent judgment and action if proper conditions are furnished. I have been accused more than once and from opposed quarters of an undue, a Utopian, faith in the possibilities of intelligence and in education as a correlate of intelligence. At all events, I did not invent this faith. I acquired it from my surroundings as far as those surroundings were animated by the democratic spirit. For what is the faith of democracy in the method of consultation, of conference, of persuasion, of discussion, in forming of public opinion which in the long run is self-corrective, except faith in the capacity of the intelligence of the common man to respond with commonsense to the free play of facts and ideas which are secured by effective guarantees of free inquiry, free assembly and free communication? I am willing to leave to upholders of totalitarian states of the right and the left the view that faith in the capacities of intelligence is Utopian. For the faith is so deeply embedded in the methods which are intrinsic to democracy that when a professed democrat denies the faith he convicts himself of treachery to his profession.

Free Gatherings The Final Guarantee

WHEN I THINK of the conditions under which men and women are living in many foreign countries today, fear of espionage, with danger hanging over the meeting of friends for friendly conversation in private gatherings, I am inclined to believe that the heart and final guarantee of democracy is in free gatherings of neighbors on the street corner to discuss back and forth what is read in uncensored news of the day, and in gatherings of friends in the living rooms of houses and apartments to converse freely with one another. Intolerance, abuse, calling of names because of differences of opinion about religion or politics or business, as well as because of differences of race, color, wealth or degree of culture are treason to the democratic way of life. For everything which bars freedom and fullness of communication sets up barriers which divide human beings into sets and cliques, into antagonistic sects and factions, and the democratic way of life is undetermined. Merely legal guarantees of the civil liberties of free belief, free expression, free assembly are of little avail if in daily life freedom of communication, of give and take ideas, facts, experiences is choked by mutual suspicion, by abuse, by fear and hatred. These destroy the essential condition of the democratic way of living even more effectually than open coercion which—as the example of totalitarian states proves—is effective only when it succeeds in breeding hate, suspicion, intolerance in the minds of individual human beings.

Finally, given the two conditions just mentioned, democracy as a way of life is controlled by personal faith in personal day-by-day working together with others. Democracy is the belief that even when needs and ends or consequences are different for each individual, the habit of amicable cooperation—which may include, as in sport, rivalry and competition—is itself a priceless addition to life. To take as far as possible every conflict which arises—and they are bound to arise out of the atmosphere and medium of force, of violence as a means of settlement—into that of discussion and of intelligence is to treat those who disagree even profoundly with us as those from whom we may learn, and insofar as friends. A genuinely democratic faith in the possibility of conducting disputes, controversies and conflicts as co-operative undertakings in which both parties learn by giving the other a chance to express itself, instead of having one party conquer by forceful suppression of the other—a suppression which is nonetheless one of violence when it takes place by psychological means of ridicule, abuse, intimidation, instead of by overt imprisonment or concentration camps. To co-operate by giving differences a chance to show themselves in the belief that the expression of difference is not only a right of the other persons but is a means of enriching one's own life experience, is inherent in the democratic personal way of life.

Treat It As A Way Of Personal Life

IF WHAT HAS BEEN said is charged with being a set of moral commonplaces, my only reply is that that is just the point in saying them. For to get rid of the habit of thinking of democracy as something institutional and external and to acquire the habit of treating it as a way of personal life is to realize that democracy is a moral ideal and so far as it becomes a fact is a moral fact. It is to realize that democracy is a reality only as it is indeed a commonplace of living.

Since my adult years have been given to the pursuit of philosophy, I shall ask your indulgence if in concluding I state briefly the democratic faith in the formal terms of a philosophic position. So stated, democracy is belief in the ability of human experience to generate the aims and methods by which further experience will grow in ordered richness. Every other form of moral and social faith rests upon the idea that experience must be subjected at some point or other to some form of external control; to some "authority" alleged to exist outside the processes of experience. Democracy is the faith that the process of experience more important than any special result attained, so that special results achieved are of ultimate value only as they are used to enrich and order the ongoing process. Since the process is thus capable of being educative, faith in democracy is all one with faith in experience and education. All ends and values that are cut off from the ongoing process become arrests, fixations. They strive to fixate what has been gained instead of using it to open the road and point the way to new and better experiences.

If one asks what is meant by experience in this connection my reply is that it is the free interaction of individual human beings with surrounding conditions, especially the human surroundings, which develops and satisfies need and desire by increasing knowledge of things as they are. Knowledge of conditions as they are is the only solid ground for communication and sharing; all other communication means the subjection of some persons to the personal opinion of other persons. Need and desire—out of which grew purpose and direction of energy—goes beyond what exists, and hence beyond knowledge, beyond science. It continually opens the way into the unexplored and unattained future.

Democracy as compared with other ways of life is the sole way of living which believes wholeheartedly in the process of experience as end and as means; as that which is capable of generating the science which is the sole dependable authority for the direction of further experience and which releases emotions, needs and desires, that call into being the things which have not existed in the past. For every way of life that fails in its democracy limits the contacts, the exchanges, the communications, the interactions by which experience is steadied while it is also enlarged and enriched. The task of this release and enrichment is one that has to be carried on day by day. Since it is one that can have no end till experience itself comes to an end, the task of democracy is for ever that of creation of a freer and more humane experience in which all share and to which all contribute.

Rhinelander Will Leaves $1,000,000 Estate to Widow

Mrs. Helen M. Rhinelander, of 1702 Rhode Island avenue northwest, was left the $1,000,000 estate of her husband, the Right Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, retired Episcopal Bishop of Pennsylvania, in his will, which was filed for probate in the District Court yesterday.

The estate included $120,000 of the bishop's property and a legacy estimated at $800,000, which he was to receive from the estate of William Cabell Rives 3d. Mr. Rives, a leading Virginia philanthropist, died last year.

Bishop Rhinelander was ordained in 1897 after studies at Harvard and Oxford universities. Be became a bishop in 1911 and served until 1923, when he retired because of ill health, making his home in Washington. He became warden of the college of preachers at the National Cathedral, where he served until 1937, when he became warden emeritus. He died at his summer home in Gloucester, Mass., last September.

Attorney H. Lee Boatwright represented the widow, whom Bishop Rhinelander named his executrix when he drew the will 11 years ago. Besides his wife, the bishop was survived by three sons, Frederic W. Rhinelander, Philip M. Rhinelander and Laurens H. Rhinelander.

Americans Choke

I WOULD LIKE TO offer some pear-shaped thoughts today on a subject which has been thoroughly misrepresented.

There is a report abroad in the country that the American Americans, meaning those who believe in the American system of government, the Constitution and all, hereafter called Americans, are determined to prevent the teaching of communism and Hitlerism, and, as much as possible, to suppress belief in those vices. That is untrue. The Americans know that if they were to silence such teachings and try to suppress such belief they would therein contaminate themselves with the very evils which they detest so much. The campaign against communism and Hitlerism is a defense not against ideas but against intrusion into the politics and other strictly domestic affairs of the United States by organizations operating under the direction of Josef Stalin and Adolph Hitler.

These organizations—the Communist Party and the Anti-American Bund—say they aren't under orders and don't receive their support from Stalin and Hitler, respectively. But the Americans say that, dammit, they are and they do. It has been proved to the satisfaction of the Americans that they are and do, and that verdict is final.

Anyone who believes in Stalinism or communism may preach himself hoarse, subject, of course, to local and personal deviations from the straight line of democratic tolerance.

Browder Cinched Verdict Of Guilty

NOW, HOW DID we reach the verdict that these groups are agents of foreign dictators and carrying out their orders?

Earl Browder himself was the witness who convicted the Communist Party.

Never mind the testimony of Ben Gitlow, who said he stood trial in Moscow, and, by Stalin's orders, was removed from the leadership of an organization purporting to be an American political party. Skip the fact that Stalin then appointed Browder head of a Russian political branch store operating here without even a perfunctory nod to the democratic method. Ignore the fact that Browder and Gitlow, present and past dictators of the party here, used fake passports to travel in the interests of the Soviet government. All that is just background.

The verdict of guilty was cinched by Browder himself when he said the American party members had to believe in and refrain from criticising Stalin's deal with Hitler. Whether it was a decent or indecent deal is beside the question. Browder laid down the law, which means that even if Stalin made an alljance with Japan or Germany or both to attack the United States the members of his party would have to side with Stalin.

Several members of Stalin's American branch wanted to reserve judgment on his Hitler deal, but they weren't even allowed to do that. They had to approve it or get out, and a few of them gagged on that ultimatum and did get out. That is Browder's idea of freedom of speech and thought.

Bund Opens Door From Within

WELL, HOW DID the Americans arrive at the conclusion that the Nazi anti-American Bund is a branch store of the Hitler government?

They convinced themselves of the foreignness and anti-American purposes of the Bund by comparing it to the other bunds of Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Poland, which masqueraded in the same garb, manners and tricky pretense of loyalty, but meanwhile served as secret police, military spies, wreckers and disrupters, and finally, opened the gates from the inside, delivered the countries over to Hitler and put the finger on loyal patriots, who were then taken out and shot by German firing squads.

These are the reasons why the Americans turned on the Communist Party and the Bund.

The teaching of their poison is neither forbidden nor feared, because the more Americans learn about them the more clearly they realize that treachery, treason and service to enemies of the American people and their system are inherent requirements of both of those isms. Americans just naturally choke on them and spit them out.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Virtually Unanimous Desire To Stay Out Of War

BEFORE THIS WAR began there were, of course, a huge majority who fervently wished to keep the United States out of it. But only a small minority really believed that this was possible. The war itself has, however, made the people virtually unanimous in their desire to stay out. But what is much more important, the war is producing a general conviction that it is entirely feasible for the United States to maintin its neutrality.

The underlying reason for this change in American opinion is not to be found in the propaganda of the so-called isolationists. The change is due to the fact that the war which is actually being fought is radically different from the war which was anticipated. Until as late as approximately the middle of July every indication seemed to point to the outbreak of a world war: that is to say a war in which Germany, Japan, and then even Italy would attack together, and carry the war into the Pacific, the Mediterranean, and through Spain and Africa into the Atlantic. In a war of that character and such scope it would have been a miracle if the United States had not become involved.

The actual war, however, is not a world war. It is not even a general European war. Though it is a big war, it is a localized war in which the non-combatant powers are more numerous than the belligerents. Moreover, the war has thus far at least been of a radically different character than the popular imagination supposed it would be. The war at sea is not yet in any sense the kind of challenge to British sea power which we should have seen had Japan and Italy struck toward Hongkong, Singapore, Suez, and Gibraltar; the Nazis are waging what is not more than a guerrilla war against the blockading fleet.

In the air the dreaded blitzkrieg by thousands of bombers has not yet materialized; the British and French have been allowed to mobilize completely without any interference from the supposedly irresistible Nazi air force. On land there are no signs of an offensive which aims at a decision on the field of battle.

We See Spectacle Of A Contracting War

INSTEAD OF AN expanding war which drags in the whole world, we see the spectacle of a contracting war. The Mediterranean nations, the Balkan nations, the American nations, and perhaps even the Far Eastern nations are tending to draw together in local groups, and then into increasingly concerted action among the groups, to support one another in the preservation of their common neutrality. Thus the American nations that met at Panama have proclaimed their solidarity with the Scandinavian nations when they met at Oslo; both groups would surely welcome the opportunity to proclaim their solidarity with the southern neutrals, the Balkan nations, and with Turkey, with Italy, with Spain and Portugal. The well-informed Japanese know that the ultimate aim of this country is not to quarrel with them, to strangle them, or to make them vulnerable to their Russian danger, but to reach a settlement which would establish a genuine new order of things in the Pacific.

The course of events has thus made neutrality a positive and practical course of action that fits the facts of the world we live in, and is consistent with the defense of the highest moral interests of civilized men. As an instrument for making neutrality effective in this particular war, the Senate bill is in general admirably contrived. For the cash and carry provisions are effective insurance against Americans becoming entangled in the guerrilla war off the northern coasts of Europe, and the lifting of the arms embargo is a most effective guarantee against an offensive by land and air which, if it were even partially successful, would almost certainly extend the war into the Baltic, the Balkans, the Mediterranean, and Africa.

But although a sound neutrality is not only possible now but is actually beginning to make itself effective, American thinking on the subject is still confused and uncertain. One of the reasons is that so many people are thinking not about the actual war but about the war of 1917, or about the war that was expected but has not occurred.

But there is another reason for our difficulty in thinking out a neutral policy on which the country could whole-heartedly unite. It will sound, I know, like a trivial reason. It is that the word "neutrality" is a very poor name for the great idea which it denotes. The ordinary emotional meaning of the word "neutral" is a formidable impediment to clear thinking on the subject of neutral policy.

The Word 'Neutral' Comes From 'Neither'

THE WORD "neutral" is derived from the Latin "neuter," which means "neither." All the descendants of this Latin word carry the marks of their unprepossessing ancestor. Thus in the grammars a neuter noun is neither masculine nor feminine. In botany a neuter plant is asexual. In entomology a neuter is a sterile, sexually undeveloped female insect. In chemistry nuetral means neither acid nor alkaline and in electricity neither positive nor negative. In ordinary speech the word "neutral" means among other things that which is "undefined, vague, having no decided color, indifferent." And my impression is that a great many of us are confused by this word and think that in adopting a neutral policy it is necessary for the United States to become a neuter nation.

This is a misleading error. Neutrality has a noble history and is an affirmative and constructive policy. Correctly understood, it is not a negative, shrinking, timid or indifferent attitude but it is, on the contrary, one of the greatest positive achievements of modern civilization.

Subject to correction from the specialist scholars, we may say that neutrality is a conception that has gradually become recognized in the past 300 years. Generally speaking, before the modern age in the Western World there was no such thing as a neutral: during war the belligerents treated every state either as an ally or as an enemy.

Without attempting to explain it, we may take it as a fact, I think, that only in relatively recent times, roughly from the age when the first colonists settled in Virginia and Massachusetts, the idea took root in men's minds that war ought to be abolished, and that if, nevertheless, it broke out, the war should be localized, humanized, prevented from extending its ravages and regulated so as to interfere as little as possible with the normal peaceable occupations of men.

Peace Is Real Interest Of Man

THIS, IF I understand it, is the human and substantial foundation of the whole conception of neutrality. It is not a game in which the neutral is something between a shivering spectator and an intimidated umpire. Nor, is it a cross-word puzzle for lawyers. It is rather a proclamation of the historically new faith that peace is the real interest of mankind and that war is an evil interruption to be suppressed, confined, or regulated.

Neutrality is an old American policy, and though particular measures have had to be amended to fit special circumstances, the underlying American purpose has been remarkably consistent. In the struggle for the freedom of the seas, in the audacious declaration of the Monroe Doctrine, in the new declaration of Panama, in our continually reiterated concern for the safety of small nations, in our profound sympathy with peoples resisting aggression, the neutral purpose has always been the same: to localize war and minimize its destructiveness.

The so-called isolationists need have no fears that American neutrality will not be sincere, genuine and unalterable, or that it can be subverted by foreign intrigue, if only they will help to make our neutrality positive, constructive, brave, worthy of this country's past, and consistent with its enormous influence and power. There will be no doubt about our neutrality in this war if only they will stop the wailing and let the people found their neutrality, not on small fears, but on a proud consciousness of the civilizing mission of a great neutral.

For, if our neutrality is not directed by a clear head, a good conscience, and a stout heart, either it will break down under the pressure of events that we have failed to deal with in time, or it will demoralize the people and infect their spirit with a degenerate indifference and inactivity and irresolution. In crying out for a negative and shrinking neutrality, these debaters are undermining the cause they mean to serve.

Neutrality Of Fear Won't Satisfy U. S.

THEY ARE MISJUDGING the quality of the people. For the American Nation will never be satisfied with a neutrality of fear; or one which makes them shamefaced because they have no worthy reason for staying out of the battle; or one which asks them to believe that there is no difference between right and wrong; or one which asks them to condone enormous evil by remembering lesser evils; or one which appears only to offer them a storm-cellar in which they may take refuge from their human obligations.

What they want is a neutrality which restricts the war and preserves the peace, shortens the war and hastens a settlement, contracts the war and then makes possible a good peace. They want a neutrality in which they may do a man's work in conserving their civilization. And if they are denied such a neutrality, they will find neither security nor honor nor peace of mind, and they will become morally sick and spiritually embittered as their moral energies are repressed and frustrated, as in their secret hearts they do not feel they have been equal to their dignity as men.

'Fast and Furious' Presents Unusual Trio; College Romeos Have Their Night Tonight; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

THREE YOUNG GIRLS, each related to a man of achievement, are seeking screen eminence through the medium of the new comedy-mystery, "Fast and Furious," opening on Thursday at Loew's Capitol Theater. It is not precisely clear what bearing their distinguished lineage will have upon their ability to sway audiences, but time probably will have something to say in the way of clarifying that point and answering Mr. Shakespeare's pertinent inquiry as to "What's in a name?"

BELL

But to get down to the nub of the matter, it seems that Margaret Roach, daughter of Hal Roach, famous producer, who, perhaps, had more to do with the rise of Harold Lloyd—and whatever became of him?—to the top flight of screen comedians, has her biggest role in this picture; Inna Gest, Russian-born niece of Morris Gest, famed theatrical producer, plays the role of a beauty pageant winner, and Ann Borglum, niece of Gutzon Borglum, one of the greatest of living sculptors, makes her screen debut in this subject. To carry the prevalence of great names a little farther, Ann Sothern, whose real name is Harriette Lake, bears close blood ties ties to Simon Lake, inventor of the submarine, and Franchot Tone, cast opposite her in the leading male role, traces his family name back to the Irish patriot of a century ago—so I am told—Wolfe Tone.

With Mr. Tone and Miss Sothern, screengazers of the Capital are fairly familiar. The other three will have to rely for immediate recognition primarily upon the notable attainments of their forebears. Hal Roach reared himself from taxi driver to the stature of an important figure in the development of the cinema; Mr. Gest is famed for many fine stage productions, including that of "The Miracle" in this country, and Mr. Borglum, among other things, has to his credit the finest piece of portrait sculpture extant—the marble head of Abraham Lincoln that stands in the rotunda of the United States Capitol.

If there is, indeed, anything in the defensible contention that the difference between a chorus girl or an extra and a star is primarily a matter of what is contained in the cranial cavities, than the Misses Roach, Gest and Borglum should be stars almost over night—provided of course that there is anything in the disputed theories of heredity.

At any rate, it is all a pleasant deviation from the usual course of motion picture publicity releases, which may be taken for whatever you think it is worth—if anything.

Local entertainers are to have another chance at the big-time stage, according to announcement made yesterday. Presented five times a week, over Columbia Broadcasting Station WJSV, the "Washington Hour" introduces Washington entertainers on each program. From these aspirants for public recognition, the Earle Theater will select one performer, or one group, to be presented as the WJSV-Earle "find of the month" on a future stage bill. With this incentive, aspiring Capital artists should be pleased to learn that all they have to do to secure a trial is to apply for full information to Lloyd Dennis, program manager at WJSV.

The drama desks, from time to time, are called upon to participate in some fantastic enterprises, but seldom anything so far-fetched as the petition from Laura E. Carson, of D'Orsay's, 17 Rue de la Paix, Paris, France, for help in determining which is the best-groomed feminine star of Hollywood. Not on the screen, mind you—"they're all perfect there"—but "at home, at the beach, at intimate little dinner parties, when they appear without the studios' expert aid."

Careful consideration of the rival claims, it appears, has narrowed the list of candidates to Joan Bennett, Joan Crawford, Madeleine Carroll, Claudette Colbert, Marlene Dietrich, Irene Dunne, Olivia de Havilland, Norma Shearer, Janet Gaynor, Dorothy Lamoure, Priscilla Lane, Jeanette McDonald, Ginger Rogers, Rosalind Russell and Loretta Young, if that makes 15.

Never having been at home, at the beach or at intimate little dinner parties with any of them, and having met only the Misses Bennett, Carroll, Dunne, Gaynor, Lane, Rogers and Young under totally different circumstances, I fear this column cannot be of any appreciable aid to Miss Carson in her quandary. If you can do any better, we'll gladly pass it along.

Just to make it unanimous, an eleventh-hour decision has been reached by the high command of Loew's, Inc., to make Thursday the opening day of new attractions at the Columbia Theater, as well as the Capitol and Palace, effective this week. First announcements exempted the Columbia—for no apparent reason—but that was finally rectified, if that is what it amounts to.

Tonight is the night of romance for those five collegiate Romeos who will spend the later stretches of the evening night-spotting with Ann Rutherford, one of the most scintillant personalities ever to make its way from the Hollywood studios to a Washington stage. John Smith, Georgetown's baseball captain; George Strange, hockey captain, ace gridder and boxer of Catholic University; American University's quarterback, Archie Norford; Student Leader Wayne Kniffen, of George Washington, and Maryland University's Bert Coleman are the fortunate five. They will find themselves in fast company when they match wits, humor and vocabulary with the brilliant young Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer actress, who is most immediately known to a majority of picturegoers as the perennial sweetheart of Mickey Rooney in the Hardy Family series of domestic screen dramas. I warn her campus escorts that Miss Rutherford is a young woman in a million and that they had better be on their toes, as their coaches would say—and especially on that dance floor!

A double-feature bill consisting of a revival of "A Man to Remember" and "The Wedding of Palo" will be presented at the Little Theater, beginning Wednesday morning. For the benefit of those who are accustomed to catch these new bills at the Little at the late Tuesday night previews, it should be made known that only "A Man to Remember" will be shown tonight, following the last projection of "Heart of Paris." No time for the Knud Ramussen epic of the Greenland Eskimos. So now you know the half of it.

Loew Publicist Bell has gone and done it again. Having won two trips to Europe, a handful of $500 prizes and the like, Master J. Raymond now has been awarded a first-prize plaque by Martin Quigley's Motion Picture Herald, foremost of the motion picture trade papers, for outstanding showmanship among the country's managers and publicists during July, August and September. With a third-place medal already to his credit, this puts him in line for the year's grand prize, including a free trip to Hollywood.

ELLIOT PAUL, author of "Life and Death of a Spanish Town," just returned from Paris, where he lived in the same house with Gen. de Castelnau, who won World War renown as the Defender of Nancy . . . The general, who is 89 years old, lives on the sixth floor of that apartment house, but never failed to appear in the air-raid shelter in the basement during the raid-warning rehearsals . . . Paul asked him why he descended six flights to the shelter and then up again each time . . . "It's not that I want to live longer," Gen. de Castelnau explained. "But I feel I should set an example to the people in the neighborhood."

Fred Kaplan, the bridge player, will be associate counsel in the defense of Lepke Buchalter . . . Broadway's current delights are the new revue at the Cotton Club and Gertrude Niesen at the Versailles . . . THE RANEE of Sarawak, wife of "The White Rajah," will remain in America and soon will start a lecture tour. The Ranee told a group about her plans to live here. "Okay, then," proposed Teddy Powell, the band leader, "how about joining my orchestra—as a vocalist?" "No, thank you very much," the Ranee declined. URSULLA ELKAN, daughter of Benno Elkan—one of the world's best sculptors, who now is in exile—arrived on the De Grasse this week, but wasn't permitted to land. Contrary to the announcements, the Masterpieces of Art Exhibit will renew its fair contract for next year. If enough money can be raised, Spain's art—stored in Geneva during the Revolution and then returned to Madrid—will be brought here . . . Millicent Rogers, who is at Doctors Hospital, will remain in America and has rented a house in Washington.

IN 1926 Columbia Pictures produced a movie called "The Blood-Ship," starring Wallace Beery . . . The Ince estate immediately brought suit, alleging that it plagiarized "Behind the Door," a movie which had been made many years before. The plaintiffs insisted that this new film prevented the reissuance of "Behind the Door" . . . Columbia settled the suit for $2,500, receiving in return those reissue rights, which then were deemed insignificant and merely the legal basis of a nuisance suit . . . But "Behind the Door" featured an excellent war theme, which now is timely. And so Columbia Pictures' next production will be a remake of that movie.

Willy Pogany, Noted Artist, Now Cartoonist

Portrait Painter Wins Privilege of Drawing Color Film Comedies

By Frederick C. Othman,
United Press Hollywood Correspondent

Hollywood, Oct. 23.—Willy Pogany, the internationally known painter, who tangled in court last year with Miss Constance Bennett over how thick her thighs should look, had some clients today who couldn't possibly register any complaints about his art.

He was working at Universal Studios, in charge of the color department of Walter Lantz's cartoon factory, and enjoying to the fullest the painting of birds and animals and fawns, who did funny antics on the screen—but never made any kicks to the artist.

Pogany is one of the great portrait artists. His standard fee is $3,500 per picture. He is in the midst of decorating William Randolph Heart's San Simeon home with murals—a task which so far has taken four years—and his portraits hang in many of this country's largest homes.

Everything is okay, so far as Pogany is concerned, except his portrait of Miss Bennett. He spent a year working on it and when he delivered it, his client said he'd made her thighs too big, her hips too round, her mouth too wiggly, her waist too thick and her fingernails too pale.

Kept Portait Himself

"I have her picture at home in my living room," Pogany said. "I have had several offers for it, but I have refused them all. I think it is a beautiful picture; I just try to forget that it is a portrait of that woman."

Furthermore, Pogany said, he'd rather not talk about his court appearance. He said he'd rather discuss animated cartoons. "For years," he said, "I've been trying to get one of the studios to hire me to make them. I talked it over with Walt Disney and all the others, and they all thought I was fooling.

"But I finally persuaded Walter Lantz that I meant it when I said I believed cartoons were an important segment of the artistic world, and destined to become more important. Anyhow, he let me go to work on them."

Pogany unreeled for us his first color cartoon, entitled "Peterkin." We never saw a reel like his before. The backgrounds were painted with all the skill and detail that Pogany possesses. The colors were magnificent.

Net effect was that of the birds and beasts cavorting before a series of beautifully painted landscapes. The principal character was a baby fawn, with human face, shaggy legs and pink bottom.

Censorship Worries

"That bottom was something of a problem," Pogany said. "I've always loved to paint fawns. The first picture I ever did was when I was 14 and it was of a fawn. Fawns don't wear pants. I was worried about the censors in connection with this one, but I took it up with the Hays office and explained what I was trying to do, and they finally said go ahead, so long as I kept it artistic. That I tried to do."

He did, too. Nobody will take offense at Pogany's pantless fawn.

Speaking of censorship, consider Edith Head, dress designer at Paramount, who was assigned to make 200 lava-lavas, or long sarongs, for the dancing girls in a movie called "East of Singapore." She looked up the facts, and produced 200 lava-lavas, designed to leave the right sides of 200 feminine abdomens authentically bare.

The girls tried on their costumes. More than half of them had scars from appendicitis operations, which no amount of body makeup would cover, so Miss Head redesigned all the lava-lavas.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Oct. 23 (INS).—Unless the British government feels that Robert Donat is needed at home, he will come to Hollywood to be starred in "I Had a Comrade," the anti-Nazi story previously scheduled for him in London. Victor Saville, the producer, took a trip to Washington to confer with the British Ambassador on the advisability of bringing "I Had a Comrade" to the screen. He was advised to let his conscience be his guide and he says since the story is factual as well as good entertainment, he feels that it should be made without delay.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Saville's visit to Washington will probably answer the question that all Hollywood producers have been interested in knowing—that is, whether it is permissible for neutral America to film anti-Nazi stories or forget them.

Just learned that Merle Oberon's contract with Warners is apt to be permanent. When she finishes "We Shall Meet Again," she will be starred in their prize package, Rachel Field's best seller, "All This and Heaven Too." This sorta looks as if Warners are making up for their shortage of women stars. In the past, Hal Wallis has had an abundance of male stars for whom he bought innumerable stories but never, outside of Bette Davis and Miriam Hopkins, any big femme names. The fact that Merle has been put in two stories originally planned for Bette proves that Warners have big ideas in store for her.

Death Valley Scotty practically had to be trapped into working as a technical adviser on "Virginia City." For years various studios have gone gunning for our famous desert character, offering him plenty of do-ri-me for his advice on pictures about the great open spaces. But he refused them all until a friend of his, Elmer Fryer, the portrait photographer, approached him about the Warner picture just for the fun of it. "That's more like it," said Senor Scotty. "I don't have to work for money—but fun is something else again."

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: The pretty girl with William Holden at the Cocoanut Grove was Brenda Marshall; the Helen Gilbert-Mischa Bakalienikoff divorce comes up this week; Margaret Sullavan and Leland Hayward were among the dinner guests who helped the Willie Wylers celebrate their first wedding anniversary. Maggie was once wed to Willie, but they have remained good friends; Mrs. Don Ameche, whose health hasn't been good since the birth of her baby, is sick with the flu. Martha Ray knocked the box-office records sky high when she did $25,000 worth of business her first six days of personal appearances in Philadelphia; Doris Carson is wearing Jeffrey Lynn's ring and if the knot isn't already tied, it won't be long now; Gloria Youngblood, once the heart-beat of Rudy Vallee, is back in town wearing a diamond and sapphire ring and telling those who are interested she expects to marry a sports promoter in Havana Christmas Day.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Basket on Lanes' Step Holds Puppy

A basket left on the front porch of their Laurel Canyon home gave Rosemary and Priscilla Lane some anxious and exciting moments.

The mystery basket was discovered by the maid when she went to answer the doorbell. Plaintive whimpers emerged from it, and the maid rushed to summon the household. Rosemary and Priscilla lifted the lid of the wicker basket a bit hesitantly. Inside was an Irish setter puppy. A red ribbon was tied about its neck. A card read: "For Rosemary."

The actress is keeping the pup. But she'd like to know whom to thank for it.

In Hollywood

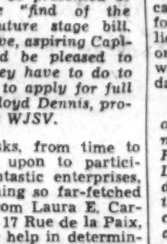
Hollywood, Calif., Oct. 23.

Director Norman Taurog tells me he's never had more co-operation on any picture than he's getting from Fred Astaire, Eleanor Powell and George Murphy. Eleanor is so ambitious she won't even take a vacation when picture's finished, but stays right here to get a singing and dramatic lesson every day. She loves working with Fred and says this "Broadway Melody" is the first good thing she's done since the "Melody of 1936," but they're hoping, and so am I, that "I Married an Angel" will be their next. Norman tells me they act like kids. "So I treat 'em that way, bringing each a little bag of candy, counting out the same number of caramels in each bag. You see, I know my youngsters."



HOPPER

Taurog's a darling, and when he talks about pre-prohibition Hollywood you take another look, for he's only 40. He laughs about John's Cafe, in the Bonny Brier. The cook knew all the actors and whether they were broke or not they could be sure of a meal at John's. The thrill on Sunday was riding a street car to the beach and carrying your lunches in a paper bag. He and Jack Pickford used to go to the Alexander Bar, Pickford going in first. He'd have a beer, then return so Norman could get his beer—for Norman was in short pants, and he had to borrow Jack's longies, because they didn't serve "minors."

Not long ago reporters were interviewing celebrities aboard a giant liner, when a quiet man came along and begged to meet a certain girl in the same room. "All through this trip," he explained to the newsboys, "I've tried to get up courage to introduce myself and dance with her!" The girl was Merle Oberon and the man Dale Carnegie—who wrote "How to Win Friends and Influence People." Whether he's bashful or hasn't learned the secret of making friends is the question—according to reports from M-G-M, they're in the dark, too. For at a welcome dinner for Mr. Carnegie, everybody was present but Mr. Carnegie. Maybe he read the burlesque on his book, "How to Lose Friends and Alienate People."

When Errol Flynn dined the Ranee of Sarawak (you know they wrote "White Rajah" together) the Ranee presented Errol with a native kris. It's a gruesome weapon, been in her husband's family for years and, as legend goes, is cursed because a native stole it, ran amok and killed 38 people. What a weapon to put in the hands of an impetuous Irishman and of all places—in Hollywood.

Knowing Hollywood's power, Brian Donlevy is pulling for his pet pooch, and so am I, as are Henry Koster, Clark and Carole, Claudette Colbert, Joan Crawford, Marion Davies, Tim Holt, Patricia Morison. All because we own and love Dachshunds; some of which are five generations old in our country—longer than some people I could mention. There's no sense changing their names to Badger Dogs. They changed a Hamburger to a Liberty steak during the last war . . . Paul Yawitz sold Universal a story called "Perfect Baby." It was sneak-previewed the other night under title, "Little Accident." You see, studio owned the latter story and title and decided Paul's yarns for Baby Sandy fit perfectly. But now they're in a stew—Yawitz has been hired to adapt the original "Little Accident"—and for want of a better title it may be released as "The Perfect Baby," which could only happen here! . . . It's not a gag with Ken Murray—he really wants to adopt a baby.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Bachelor Loves Widow Whose Affection Has Cooled; Should He Continue to 'Assist' Her?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am middle-aged, profitably employed in Government service, considered efficient by my superiors, sober-minded, home loving and I have fortunately outgrown two bad habits of my youth. Nearly three years ago, I met a very charming widow, 13 years younger than myself. She has four growing daughters and a small son. A very strong attachment sprang up between us and she expressed a willingness to marry me. The children welcomed me whole-heartedly.

We all went on picnics and motor trips together and for a year and a half I can truly say that I spent the happiest period of my life. We telephoned each other nearly every morning and saw each other at least four times a week. Her means of support were somewhat limited, so I was happy to contribute in many ways to the comfort and pleasure of the family. I learned all the birthdays and acted accordingly.

A year ago she took her mother and the children on a distant motor trip, which I admit did not receive my approval. I now feel that I probably had an intuition about its outcome. She stayed a bit longer than was planned and when she returned I foolishly did not extend a very hearty welcome. What I intended to be merely an expression of annoyance at the extended stay was misconstrued—and stressed—as an unworthy trait. I confess to a strain of jealousy, but I have never wavered in my love.

After this, she displayed a growing attitude of coolness. Then she stated that she no longer cared to marry; that she wished to have "a nice time"; that I was too sober minded; in short, that we could never be happy together and could only hope to be friends in the future. I still retain the affection of the children, who have observed their mother's changed attitude. The younger ones even secretly sympathize and try to console.

Is this attitude a whim or an honest-to-goodness reversal? Should I surrender to her expressed ideas and count myself out? Or should I hang on to the ropes, hoping for a change of heart? I wish to continue my assistance. Should I? I still love her devotedly and she says there is no one else. This makes the situation all the more puzzling. Please advise me.

PERPLEXED.

A Spirited Woman Who Wants No Bossing

DEAR PERPLEXED: One gets the impression that the woman has great buoyancy of temperament. Any widowed mother of five growing children, who must support them on "limited means," who would gather up the whole brood and a grandmother besides and set forth on a long motor trip for an indefinite stay is full of the spirit of high-hearted adventure. She is not the sort of woman who is apt to tie herself down by second marriage to a "stick-in-the-mud" type of man. She is an independent personality, definitely, who doesn't take gracefully to the idea or actuality of being bossed and managed by beau or husband.

I imagine that your sustained sulky objection to the trip was something of an eye-opener to her. Prior to that telltale "rift within the lute," she probably was inclined to make allowances for your perhaps stodgy and plodding mannerisms and mentality, on the ground that you were so stable, dependable and agreeably understanding. But when she learned that you could be set as granite in your disapproval of a given project, and that you were capable of attempting to impose your will (not to mention your displeasure) upon her, and that, moreover, your concept of "the suitable thing," is fundamentally so different from hers—I imagine she decided, rather grimly and irrevocably, that so far as she was concerned, the deal was off.

There is nothing to suggest that she is acting on "whim," in throwing you over; that she is merely taking transient feminine revenge and is, therefore, likely to change her mind and call you back. I believe she really means it when she says you "could never be happy together." She knows what she wants from life—as she says, "a nice time"—and she has come to the conclusion that marriage to you would cramp her casual, cheerful style of living. With five children on her hands, she must know from experience what it is to be "tied down," years on end, and she probably has no intention of being comparably tethered again.

I can imagine that she wants, as she might say, "to be young while there's still time," and that her image of the ideal second husband is a man whose income and temperament will guarantee her some margin for adventure. And it appears that you don't correspond to that image very closely. You don't want change or chance for yourself, and it would be your inclination to doggedly deny it to those whose actions are subject to your control. It stands to reason, therefore, that you would be ill suited to, and unhappy with, a wife who wanted to be footloose in marriage, so you ought to be grateful to the lady for releasing you from a tentative contract that would, if fulfilled, unquestionably have eventuated in a future full of friction.

You speak of wanting to "continue your assistance"—i. e., contributing to the comfort and pleasure of the family as a unit, by means of substantial gifts on birthdays and other sentimental anniversaries. You ask, "Should I (do it)?" Whether you should do so depends (a) on why you would be doing it, and (b) on whether the lady would permit it.

If she is willing to readjust the relationship to a so-called platonic exchange, and if you can sustain a genuinely altruistic interest in the family's welfare (after accepting the fact that love and marriage are out of the question), there is no moral reason why you shouldn't continue to lighten their economic load by giving useful gifts on suitable occasions.

Clothes Catcher For Ironing Day

Newspapers spread on the floor to catch large items being ironed will no longer be a part of the ironing-day paraphernalia.

A new clothes catcher, recently introduced in the Merchandise Mart, Chicago, keeps the cloths clean while ironing. The catcher is a sheet of unbleached muslin, which is pinned to the far side of the ironing board, and which forms an apron base held off the floor by a wooden rack.

Does this piquant heart-shaped face suggest anything to you? This is Andy Hardy's sweetheart, Polly Benedict, otherwise known as Ann Rutherford, who is in Washington this week, and who is posing here in a local furrier's proposal for colder days to come. This coat of neat flat Persian lamb is straight of cut in front and flares youthfully from the shoulder line in back. A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Oct. 23.

AT THIS STAGE of the game there's no doubt that the pet of the stage fall is this Ann Miller, the machine-gun tapper of the "Scandals," who was Lucille Ann Collier down in Chareno, Tex. Every beauty and every hit now comes from that magnificent State. I shouldn't be surprised if this so-called Brazilian, Carmen Miranda, who smashed to fame last summer singing Portugese in "Streets of Paris," is really a Dallas girl named Betty Lou Lee.

ALICE HUGHES

Yes, Ann Miller is in, and over the top, but the most interesting theatrical moment here just now is not a new baby, but an anniversary. Fifteen years ago, in 1924, a couple named Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne appeared together for the Theater Guild in "The Guardsman." This fateful evening in the New York Theater was celebrated last Friday night up in Milwaukee, where giving their quaint idea of Mr. Willie Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew."

Since that day they have starred in 14 shows for the Theater Guild, and have proven to be that crowd's lucky pieces. Lynn is still a very handsome woman, and an excellent trouper, and in their own modest way, Lynny and Lunty are modern versions of such classic theatrical teams of the past as Ellen Terry and Sir Henry Irving and our own E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—If you like to see noted movie actors on the hoof, you'd better rush to our town this winter. Looks like a great crop on Broadway. Here are some. Paul Muni (formerly Muni Weisenfreund) will play in "Key Largo," by Maxwell Anderson. Wondrous Bette Davis aims for a play. So does Mary Astor, once the unhpapy Diary Queen. Others to be seen are Simone Simon, Mary Brian, Frances Farmer, Betty Grable, Kay Sutton, Bert Wheeler, Mary Martin, Lee Dixon and Pert Kelton. And of course Kate The Great Hepburn is still packing 'em in with "The Philadelphia Story." So if you are edified by these Wonder Folk, this will be your winter, all righty.

On the other hand, our dear big girl, Kate Smith, tells me she may go West to make a film, her first in some years . . . Pretty Betty Compton Walker, wife of our late mayor, Jimmy, isn't satisfied to be merely a florist any more. She's writing songs, too, just like her daddy used to do. Her first one was "They're Wearing Hoops Again, My Dear," and now she has another called "When You Danced By." Those Walkers do keep busy!

TOPPING THE fiction best seller list here is still "Grapes of Wrath," with John Gunter's "Inside Asia" leading the general lot. The best novel I've read in months is "Rejected Guest," by Richard Aldington. I think it his best work since the masterful "Death of a Hero," back in '28. This handsome Englishman, with his wife and small daughter, have now settled permanently in this country, and are living in Rhode Island.

Busy Women Advised To Squeeze in Stiff Slimming Exercises

IT ALWAYS has been hard to account for those 18-inch waistlines of the 1880's. Today a woman does well to get her waistline down to 23 inches, and the ones who can do that are in the minority. But in those days, apparently all the ladies had handspan waists!

Vyvyan Donner, fashion authority and commentator, has no doubt but that it was done "via the old Chinese custom of bandaging the feet of baby girls to keep them from growing. As soon as a young lady was old enough to put her hair up, she laced herself into a stiff whalebone corset—the type that made swooning a general feminine pastime—and in that way she kept her girlish figure into middle age."

The practice, as Miss Donner points out, is scarcely to be recommended to the modern woman with her busy, active life!

"But if we look at the tennis stars, we see that their waistlines are naturally very small," she says. "The only explanation is the amount of twisting and turning at the waist involved in tennis. And there's our clew for attaining the currently fashionable wasp waist."

Not all women can play tennis. But there isn't one of you who can't squeeze in a set of exercises—and here are some action exercises that will give you much the same workout as a stiff game of tennis or badminton.

Leap into the air, flinging the arms up at the sides. Try to land with the feet spread wide apart, dropping the left hand down at the side and stretching the right hand high overhead as you bend acutely to the left. Keep the hips tucked under. Repeat the exercise, bending to the right. You couldn't do much better reaching for a high one on the tennis court.

A less strenuous variation is recommended for the excessively heavy women:

Here's another of the Leaping Lena variety:

Stand with the arms held straight out at the sides, shoulder level. Have the feet close together and parallel. Leap and, as you land, twist the upper portion of the body to one side, the lower portion to the opposite. Repeat, reversing positions. In this exercise, the feet should be held fairly close together and moved as a unit. Bend the knees slightly for freer movement.

Again, keep your feet on the ground: Stand with feet wide apart and arms held up overhead but not straight. Shift the weight to the right foot, slightly bending the knee, and bend at the waist to the extreme right. Be careful not to allow the hips to jut out! Begin over, and shift and bend to the left. Make the shifts as rhythmical as possible.

'Gold Rush' Trend In Neckwear

There was a time when neckwear was neckwear and jewelry was jewelry and "never the twain shall meet," but by the new alchemy of a fertile fashion, neckwear is jewelry, and jewelry is neckwear.

Masses of glittery glamorous gold to wear under your chin is news this fall, be it a collar, a bib, or a necklace. New braided gold fabric collars in leaf and flower motifs are dressy and smart and have a jewel-like appearance. Amusing little necklace collars made of three strands of gold lame braid have multi-color wooden beads that hang in pendant fashion. "A grandma fashion revived."

Gold mesh has a new use for winter—it has been fashioned into little round collars, revers, and bibs, fits perfectly, and actually stays in place on your dress. We've tried it, and best of all, it is light as well as flexible.

Paint a Picture On Clear Glass

COLORFUL PAINTINGS on glass—how decorative they are on your walls. And how proud you are when you are the painter!

By an easy method, you paint such romantic scenes as the "Old Windmill," or lovely flowers in a vase, skyscrapers at sunset, other interesting subjects.

Our design is printed on paper, 9 by 12 inches in size. Lay it on a flat surface face up and cover with glass the same size. (Frame, glass and oil paints you get at the five-and-ten.)

Now paint directly on the glass over shaded parts of the design—plainly visible through the glass. All you need is blue, yellow and red paint which you mix according to a simple chart to get any color. For darker tones, add a little black household enamel—for lighter tones, white household enamel.

In painting the "Old Windmill" use dark rich colors. Make the windmill a deep brown, the hills violet, the large boat dark blue, the small one bright red, foliage varied shares of green.

For a rich background—when you've finished and the paint is dry—cover the painted side of the glass with a sheet of metallic paper—copper, gold or silver, and place in frame. Then hang your painting over mantel or desk—where everyone can admire it!

Other beautiful designs which you can easily paint are given in our set, SIX PICTURES TO PAINT ON GLASS to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Ninsteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name and address.

DeGoofey Gift Shoppe

TO MEET the rapidly developing knick-knack problem in this country, Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey, founder and president of the Do Something About It League, will shortly open a gift shoppe.

Mrs. DeGoofey

This announcement was made by the famous reformer yesterday at her press conference. "Now while I dislike to go into trade" she said, "and while the DeGoofey name has never been dishonored by appearing on a commercial sign, yet I feel that I must sacrifice my family pride to save the Nation's housewives from having their homes turned into museums and old curiosity shops."

"I suppose you will sell all sorts of adorable gifts, will you not, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a girl reporter.

"I shall sell NO 'adorable' gifts!" was the reply. "On the contrary, I expect to provide a place where people can get rid of their adorable gifts. The biggest problem facing American Womanhood today is what to do with all the 'adorable,' 'cunning,' and 'precious' little knick-knacks they cart home from bridge parties, luncheons, showers, etc.

Too 'Adorable' To Throw Away

"Now, most women hate to throw these things away because in the first place they are 'so utterly adorable' and in the second, there is always the possibility they will come in handy sometime. Now I expect to provide an exchange whereby these things, instead of taking up storage space in the home, may be kept in circulation."

"How soon will you be ready for business?" asked a financial editor.

"I shall open the day after Halloween so that housewives may immediately find a place for their large collections of Jack o' lanterns, witches, black cats and masquerade costumes that under ordinary circumstances would litter the house until the Thanksgiving gimcracks came into evidence. In the meantime, I want to get the various departments of my shop staffed and organized. These will be as follows:

"First, the nut cuppe department which will be in charge of Mrs. Lucellus St. Clair Ripple, local poetess. In fact, I expect to specialize in nut cuppes and thus save clubwomen the enormous amount of time and energy they expend over these adjuncts to their luncheons. Through my exchange every club will be assured of an entirely different set of cunning fluted nut cuppes for every event.

"Second, I shall have a large department devoted to favors. This will be in charge of Miss Eloise Ladyfinger, widely known china painter. This department will take care of all the darling little hand-made favors you feel constrained to take home from luncheons and parties. You know—the miniature Indians, Brownies and Charlie McCarthys, the little pots of paper flowers, the little pencils with tassels, the little animals made of gumdrops, the calendar that requires a magnifying glass to see the dates, the little 2x4 hand-painted landscapes, the little home-grown verses, etc.

"Now I plan to offer free parking space to such objets d'art and also to make them available to hostesses who are giving parties."

Sanctuary for Elephant Gongs

"Won't you handle any larger—er, debris, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked an art editor.

"Oh, yes, I shall have a bride's shower department to handle superfluous bridge luncheon sets, telephone disguises, fancy dolls, taffeta sofa cushions, closet sachets, rayon underwear, lavender bath salts, dish mops, book covers and the like; a wedding gift department to take care of left-over salad bowls, tea wagons, ash trays, door stops, cocktail shakers, kitchen clocks, bookends, sugar tongs, bon-bon dishes, etc.; and of course a miscellaneous department for porcelain cats, china penguins, flower pots in the shape of puppies, cigaret boxes, chimes, elephant gongs——"

"Just a minute, Mrs. DeGoofey," interrupted a London correspondent, "what is an elephant gong?"

"Why-er . . . why something to summon an elephant with I suppose. Anyway I see them in all the stores."

"Is that all for today, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a veteran "leg man."

"Yes, except that I have some little souvenirs for each of you that I picked up during my recent visit down in Virginia to ascertain the progress of the folk arts. Now if some of you gentlemen will help me open these large boxes I shall present each of you with a pair of handsome parlor portierres made by Virginia natives out of Virginia grown gourds and pumpkin shells."

Waist-Slimming Games

Hollywood, Calif.—Geraldine Fitzgerald, movie actress keeps her waistline slim by indulging in all the racquet, paddle and club games. She lists tennis, badminton, pingpong, rowing, golf and ice-hockey because in every one there are bends and stretches for the midrift.

Roosevelt Won't Run, Society Gossip Says

Big-Wigs in the Know Expect Him To Announce 'No Third Term' After Congress Decides Embargo Repeal Issue

By Hope Ridings Miller.

DINNER TABLE DOPE: Bigwigs in the know tell you over the soup that President Roosevelt will announce to the world that he is not seeking a third term—just as soon as Congress votes to lift the embargo. By the time the next course is served, they whisper that the President's choice for the White House is the youthful Supreme Court justice, William O. Douglas, but that Postmaster General Farley is holding out for Senator Burton K. Wheeler. I've heard this line of talk at four parties in the past week and last night I had it from a trio of officials who should know what they're talking about. I pass it on for what it's worth.

HUNT COUNTRY week-ending can give a complete line-up on what is going on down where all talk these days centers around horses and hunts. From what I heard Sunday in Virginia, every house in the hunt section will overflow with guests this week-end, when the Middleburg Hunter Show on Saturday will be the chief attraction. The following Saturday, sporting society will converge on Warrenton for the opening of the Warrenton Hunt. Biggest party on that date will be the hunt breakfast at the North Wales Club, where Amory S. Carhart, M. F. H., and Mrs. Carhart, will entertain.

Among those who will be very much missed in the round of festivities is Mrs. Robert C. Winmill, who recently left her Virginia estate for New York to visit her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Radsch. Foregoing the opening events of Warrenton's sports season, she had her horses taken to New York so she can ride to the hounds with some of the Northern packs.

SOCIETY-GO-ROUND: While former Senator William Gibbs McAdoo lunched at the Mayflower yesterday, his wife was being feted by Mme. Lombard, wife of the French Military Attache. The party took place at the Lombard home at 3006 Thirty-second street; and since the day was such a pleasant one, luncheon was finished off with coffee in the garden. There were eleven in the company, which included Countess Lasocka, wife of the recently arrived Polish attache (she's the daughter of the former Polish Ambassador to France, you know). Still other guests were Mme. Wankowicz, wife of the Polish Counselor; Mme. Wennerberg, wife of the Swedish Counselor; Mme. Lucet, wife of the Third Secretary of the French Embassy; Mrs. Warren Lee Pierson, Mrs. Herbert Feis, Mrs. Bulkley Griffin and Mrs. Brice Clagett.

NOTED IN PASSING: When the French Ambassador, Count de Saint Quentin, appears at parties these days, he makes a special request of reporters that they not mention his name . . . The personable Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki, hasn't gone that far yet; but he has become camera-shy, definitely. . . . Coming out of the theater a few nights ago with a very attractive blonde woman, he was stopped by a flock of photographers. "Not this time," he pleaded, with his most ingratiating smile. To the last man, the camera-sleuths capitulated, and like Longfellow's Arabs, silently stole away—minus pictures.

Speaking of camera-shy notables—Attorney General Murphy goes into that category when he happens to have a lady along . . . Arriving at the theater recently with Miss Ann Parker, he found several cameras pointed in his direction . . . Suddenly, something behind him occupied his attention; so while Miss Parker walked on, he hung back a moment and then sidled in, without once facing the music—pardon me, I mean the camera . . . In town from New York for a brief stay yesterday were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stewart, the former the well-known engineer who at one time was prominently mentioned for the post of Ambassador to the Soviet Union . . . Yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Stewart was teatime hostees at the Mayflower, having among her guests Mrs. Ernest Draper and Mrs. Donald Richberg.

FASHION-MINDED society will turn out by the hundreds tomorrow afternoon for the fashion show and cocktail party at the Sulgrave Club. Gowns are to be furnished by the local dress shop of which Mrs. John R. Williams formerly was head. Her daughter, Mrs. Huston Rawls, of Far Hill, N. J., recently took over duties as president of the company, and Mrs. George Eustis, of Aiken, S. C., is the new manager.

Miss Ellen Bohlen, niece of Mrs. William Corcoran Eustis, of Washington, handles the Aiken branch of the same shop. Miss Nancy Leiter, who recently returned to Washington from Beverly, Mass., is in charge of ushers for the show. Following the fashion parade, which is set for 5 p. m., tea and cocktails will be served. Among those who will preside at the tea table are Mrs. Joseph Leiter, Mrs. Ormsby McCammon, and Mrs. Harry Kerr.

Gen. and Mrs. Walcutt Return to Capital for Visit

Brig. Gen. Charles Carroll Walcutt, jr., United States Army, retired, and Mrs. Walcutt, who were stationed in Washington for many years, returned to the city this past week and will be at the Hotel Lafayette for some time.

Today they will make a brief trip to Baltimore to help celebrate the golden wedding anniversary of their old friends, Maj. Gen. Malvern Hill Barnum, United States Army, retired, and Mrs. Barnum. They will return tomorrow.

Gen. Walcutt and Gen. Barnum were classmates at West Point and graduated in 1886, which was also Gen. Pershing's class at the United States Military Academy. Three years later, October 24, 1889, Gen. (then Lieutenant) Walcutt was best man at the—then Lieutenant—Barnum's wedding in Evansville, Ill., to Miss Martha Maginnis.

When Gen. Walcutt was married in 1891 to Miss Julia Crofton, daughter of Col. R. E. A. Crofton, the Barnums were at a far station and could not attend, though all four were together again in Washington 25 years ago, to celebrate the silver wedding anniversary of the Barnums. Incidentally, Gen. and Mrs. Wacclutt were married at the first wedding ever to take place in Fort Sheridan, Illinois, then a brand new front, and her father was at that time in command of the regiment.

Genu. and Mrs. Barnum, who make their home in Brooklyn, are now visiting their son-in-law and daughter, Col. and Mrs. Frank E. Davis, in Baltimore, and it is there that a dinner and golden wedding reception will take place this evening.

Gen. and Mrs. Walcutt, who now make their home in Columbus, Ohio, have spent the summer in extensive travel. Early in the season they motored to Fort Worth, Tex., to visit Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Faguy-Cote, cousins of Gen. Walcutt.

From Texas they went on to San Diego, then up the coast and stopped with Mr. and Mrs. Howard K. Bagley on Balboa Island, off the coast of Los Angeles. After a month at the San Francisco Fair, they traveled up the coast stopping at Portland, Oreg., and Seattle, Wash., and then swung East.

Following a visit with Mrs. William C. Peyton in Belle Haven, Greenwich, Conn., they paid a visit to the New York World's Fair before coming to Washington, where they are being extensively feted by their many friends.

Dr. Morgan, Daughter Return to Capital

Dr. William Gerry Morgan and his daughter, Mrs. Myra Morgan Stump, have returned to Washington from the family summer home in New Hampshire. Mrs. Morgan and Miss Mabel Morgan will remain there three weeks longer before coming back to the Capital.

Dr. and Mrs. Morgan have leased their home at 1006 Sixteenth street and have taken an apartment at 2101 Connecticut avenue for the winter.

At the Hay-Adams

The former Prime Minister of Belgium, Georges Thunis and Mme. Thunis are in Washington on a semiofficial visit and have taken a sute at the Hay-Adams House.

Entertaining Today

Harris & Ewing

Here from California for an extended stay is Mrs. Granville Borden (above) who has been widely feted since she and her husband and their children, Beverly and Bonnie, arrived from San Francisco. Formerly a resident of Washington, Mrs. Borden will entertain a number of her Capital friends at tea this afternoon in her suite at the Shoreham

Social Notables Attend Theater

Social notables were all over the place last night for the opening of the new Kern-Hammerstein musical comedy, "Very Warm for May," at the National Theater. Half an hour before the curtain went up, scores of limousines were pulling up to the curb, depositing more than the usual number of local celebrities.

Such regular first-nighters as the Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry Woodring; Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. A. Mitchell Palmer and Mrs. Edward Beale McLean, and Sir Willmott and Lady Lewis were there, along with other equally well-known Capitalites, whose attendance at the theater is unusual.

Mr. and Mrs. John L. Lewis were in their seats a good quarter of an hour before the curtain went up. Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Jones were were seen coming down the aisle before the show began; also Justice and Mrs. Hugo Black, Senator Alben Barkley, Representative and Mrs. Sol Bloom and their daughter, Miss Vera Bloom; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carroll Glover, Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, Mrs. Irene Caldwell with Mrs. George R. Holmes, George Abell, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Earley.

Miss Maisie Howard and Miss Ann Wilkinson arrived with escorts. Mrs. Thomas Cowell was seen in the crowd, as were Mr. and Mrs. Edward Finkenstaedt, Col. and Mrs. C. C. Schiffeler, Mr. and Mrs. Franklyn Waltman, Col. and Mrs. Robert Guggenheim, Mr. and Mrs. William Shearer, Mr. and Mrs. T. Sim Lee, and Mrs. Ernest G. Walker, who arrived with her son, Mannix Walker. Max Gordon, himself, was there, along with many of his New York friends who came to the Capital especially for the opening.

Miss Rowe Becomes Wife

Mme. Gustav Orlicz-Dreszer, widow of Poland's famous air minister, announces the marriage of her daughter, Miss Margaret Rowe Rowe, and Lloyd George Saltsman, of Berwick, Pa. The ceremony, which was a surprise to families of both the bride and the bridegroom, took place at the Presbyterian Church in Baltimore on Thursday, October 19. The Rev. Joseph Norvak officiated.

Mrs. Saltsman is a daughter of Roland H. Rowe, of Washington. She is a graduate of the National Cathedral School. Mr. Saltsman is the son of Mrs. George White Knight, of Berwick.

After a brief visit here, Mr. Saltsman and his bride will take a wedding trip, and then go to Berwick, where they will be at home after November 1.

Logan to Give 'Fall Round-up'

About 60 members of Capital society will gather at Normandy Farms on Friday evening for a "fall round-up" to be given by Jack Logan. The party will start at 9 p. m. and promises to continue until the small hours of the morning.

Miss Marjory Hendricks will entertain at a vaudeville supper on Halloween, October 31, at Normandy Farms.

Count Gabriel de Gramont Becomes First in Diplomatic Corps to Go to War

THE FIRST MEMBER of Washington's diplomatic corps to enlist in the second World War is Count Gabriel de Gramont of the French embassy, who, with Countess de Gramont, will sail for Europe at noon on Saturday on the Manhattan.

Though soldiers at the front are reported so bored with the inactivity that they are writing back for playing cards, checker sets and dominoes, and the French government has not called up Count de Gramont for duty, he has insisted on going. His wife and their children will stay with the Count's family near Biarritz.

The young French diplomat, whose father was the late Duc de Gramont, is a member of one of France's oldest families. He and his wife, who is of Greek birth, have been popular members of Capital society during their tour of duty here, and are being feted by their embassy colleagues at a round of farewell parties this week. They were scheduled to be transferred to Chicago before the Count got this bee in his bonnet about the war. For the past few weeks they have had as their guest his mother, charming Mme. Victor Hugo of Paris, whose husband is a direct descendant of the author. She looks incredibly young to be a grandmother, but was married when she was only 17.

PROTOCOL, which must be enforced come battle, murder or sudden death, is going to be responsible for some rather embarrassing situations at the White House diplomatic reception on Thursday evening, December 14. As the diplomats wait in line in the East Room to file past the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, the French Ambassador and his staff will be right next to the German Charge d'Affaires. China directly follows Japan in the order of precedence, so the staffs of these embassies will be cozily together. Franco's Spain and the Soviets will form naother adjacent group, and directly after the Soviets come the newly arrived British Ambassador, Lord Lothian, and his staff. The Polish envoy will be safely separated from the German contingent by the members of the Ecuadorean and the Cuban embassies.

We predict the temperature may be somewhere near the freezing point.

ODDS AND ENDS: At Mr. and Mrs. George Grant Mason's grand party on Friday, a member of the cast of Clare Boothe's "Margin for Error" told us that the entire play is being rewritten from beginning to end . . . Thomas Leiter has taken a house in Aiken, S. C., for the season . . . Ogden Hammond, jr., has been transferred by the State Department from Vienna to Leipzig, where he will be vice consul. He is a brother of Countess Roberti, of Washington, and made his home here last year . . . Erasto Villa, of the Argentine Embassy, and his pretty wife, the former Olga Patterson, will leave around Christmas for Colombia, his new post.

THE COCKTAIL PARTY given over the week-end by the eleven bachelors of "Hockley," the Theodore Wilkinson place in Virginia, was a great success, we hear. A typical Washington gathering, it mingled young and older alike. Among the guests were Justice and Mrs. Felix Frankfurter, Loring Christie, new Canadian Minister; Mr. and Mrs. Dean Acheson, Edward Burling, senior and junior; Anne Perin, who started work yesterday as salesgirl in a dress shop; Jane Acheson and Alice Barry.

Off-Street Parking Made Club Objective

Mrs. Thorpe, Head of Women's Safety Commitee, Speaks of Season's Opening Meeting of District Women's Federation

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Municipal off-street parking facilities for the District were advocated yesterday by Mrs. George C. Thorpe, chairman of the Women's Safety Commitee, and Washington L. Cleveland, manager of the District of Columbia Division of the American Automobile Association, both of whom addressed the season's opening meeting of the District Federation of Women's Clubs at the Roosevelt Hotel.

The program on "Safety" followed a business meeting at which Mrs. Ernest Humphrey Daniel presided.

Mr. Cleveland was introduced by Mrs. Thorpe, following her announcement that the solution of the parking problem would be one of two major objectives of her committee this year. He pointed out that, although 155,000 cars daily enter the downtown area, bounded by Fourth street on the east, Constitution avenue on the south, Twentieth street on the west and N street on the north, there are only 17,382 parking spaces and only 6,000 of these are curb spaces, including those controled by 310 parking meters.

Dirksen Bill Offered Record

Asserting it is as much a municipal function to provide terminal facilities as to maintain streets and highways for motor vehicles, Mr. Cleveland urged support of the Dirksen bill. This would authorize the Commissioners to acquire land and establish off-street parking facilities with fees to cover maintenance and operation and, over a 20-year period, repay cost of the land. Mr. Cleveland said a proposed increase in the number of parking meters would produce a revenue of $100,000 a year which would be sufficient to finance an investment of several million dollars in off-street parking areas.

If Government-operated, he said, the Medical Center parking lot could charge 23 cents for all-day parking. The square between Fourth and Fifth and M and N streets northwest could be purchased and operated as a parking facility for 1,340 cars at a charge of 15 cents a day, he estimated. It also would be possible to have parking areas under the Mall and under public parks, he suggested.

Mrs. Thorpe, who was presented by Miss Mary E. Downey, federation safety chairman, prefaced her announcement of the 1939-40 obctives of the Women's Safety Committee with a resume of its accomplishments in the last five years. Last year, it secured an appropriation to provide a safety driving instructor for Abbot Vocational and Lenox schools. The second objective of the committee this year will be to duplicate that for the schools of the colored division. "Teaching our youth to drive properly and indoctrinating them with proper road psychology is winning the battle of safety in the first trenches," said Mrs. Thorpe.

Committee Record Shows Results

The committee also was responsible for an appropriation of $90,000 for purchase of a safe area for the new Jefferson Junior High School. It undertook support of this project following a survey by Capt. Rhoda Milliken, of the Police Department, showing that three-fourths of all accidents to children in Southwest Washington occurred in the area where the school was located—a stone's throw from a viaduct and railroad tracks.

Liquor Menace Pointed Out

Edward D. Merrill, president of the Capital Transit Co., contributed to the safety program a discussion of accident prevention and declared too little emphasis is placed on the danger of using even a small amount of liquor. "Driving while drunk is misleading," said Mr. Merrill. "It only takes one stout cocktail to impair judgment and slow reaction."

He also emphasized the necessity for clear vision and good health as well as habits of safe practice in driving. Accidents were reduced 27 per cent by his company in 1938 over 1936, he said.

Another speaker was Gen. Albert Cox, who talked in the interest of the Red Cross Roll Call. Mrs. Hazel Brown Piers, music chairman, presented as guest soloist Mrs. James Lee Oliver, soprano, accompanied by Mrs. Warren Grimes.

Library Given Rare Volume

The Rare Book Collection at the Library of Congress has recently acquired an addition to its old scrapbooks on the City of Washington, in a heavily bound collection of yellowed pages and rare views, recently presented by the Susan Riviere Hetzel Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution. The book was begun prior to the Civil War.

In the days when the grounds of the War College were known as "The Arsenal," and Commandant Mordecai and his family resided in the old brick Headquarters House, Miss Rosa Mordecai, young daughter of the Commandant, began this collection. In addition, she became secretary of the "Old Washingtonians," a social organization of that time, and throughout the years kept its records. Long after Miss Mordecai's family had passed on and the Old Washingtonians had disbanded, she continued to collect items of history, bits of city gossip, and pictures for her scrapbook.

Before she had reached the period of "old age," she took this with her to "Louise Home," the fine place on Massachusetts avenue given and endowed by William W. Corcoran as a home for elderly women of education and refinement and named in honor of his mother. There Miss Mordecai added choice bits donated by her friends, since her old circle had disappeared. She arranged the disposition to be made of the book after her death. In accordance with her wishes, the scrapbook came last year into the possession of the Susan Riviere Hetzel Chapter, by which it has been given to the Rare Book Collection of the Library of Congress.

District Group Aids in Survey

The Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women is co-operating in a Nation-wide survey by college-educated women into the working conditions in their home communities just launched.

Guide for those engaged in this study is a new A. A. U. W. publication, "Fair Labor Standards—What Are They?" by Jean A. Flexner and Esther Cole Franklin, who not only present the pertinent labor problems of this country today, but also sketch in their historical background.

"University women no longer shy from the "controversial question," commented Dr. Franklin, co-author, who is also a member of the A. A. U. W. headquarters staff. "Whereas once they devoted themselves to academic problems, they now are turning their trained attention to economic issues.

"There is a growing sense of social obligation among those who have been blessed by educational opportunities. They feel the necessity of making up their minds on important public problems and of making their influence count.

"Industrial strife affects everybody. It is our belief that a real community contribution can be made by well-informed women who can approach these questions objectively. There has been too great a tendency in this country to leave labor questions entirely to those immediately concerned with one side or the other of a labor dispute."

The survey as suggested covers not only finding out about community industries and the conditions under which men and women work in them, but also how these standards affect family life and the health and safety of the workers.

Duquesne Students 'Invade' University of Pittsburgh—Fists and Fire Hose Repel Them

Eyes were blackened and noses punched, to say nothing of clothes drenched, in this scramble yesterday at the University of Pittsburgh. Duquesne University students, celebrating their unexpected 21-13 victory over Pitt in Saturday's football game, "invaded" the Pitt campus surrounding the university's towering cathedral of learning. Pitt men rushed for fire hoses and doused the advancing throng. More than 20 police struggled in vain to keep order in the boisterous, cheering crowd.

Voting Rule Given for Maryland

Newcomers Must Declare Intention To Become Citizens Before Nov. 4

New residents of Maryland who want to vote in the Presidential election must declare their intention to become a citizen of Maryland before midnight, November 4, it was announced last night.

Party workers in Montgomery and Prince Georges counties are bending every effort to get all new residents declared. Residents may declare their intentions after the November 4 deadline, but will not be eligible to vote in the primaries in May or in the election in November.

In Prince Georges County, new residents must declare their intention before the clerk of the circuit court and register at a later date.

Montgomery Different

Montgomery County has a new system of registration which permits the new voter to declare his intentions before the Permanent Board of Registry and be registered at the same time.

Five supplementary boards of registration have been named in Montgomery County and are sitting every day except Sunday. One board sits each day at the County Building in Silver Spring and another board in the same area is traveling from one meeting to another to register new voters.

In the Bethesda-Chevy Chase area, both boards are traveling. Information concerning their movements can be established by calling the county commissioner's office, Bradley 117.

Rockville Board Ready

At Rockville, the main board sits every day from 9 to 4:30 p. m. in the registration offices in the old courthouse. A roving board is traveling through the upper end of the county. Information concerning any of the registration places may be obtained by calling Rockville 380 and asking for the board of registration.

According to Capt. Ward C. Caddington, Democratic member of the permanent board, 1,939 persons have been registered in the past few weeks and the board expects to register approximately 3,000 before the deadline. Those registered so far include 1,476 Democrats, 328 Republicans and 135 who declined to affiliate with any particular party. Miss Rose Dawson is Republican member of the board.

Prince Georges Scheduled

In order to assist new residents in declaring their intentions, Brice Bowie, clerk of the Prince Georges County circuit court, has announced that employes of his office will sit in the county as follows:

Friday, October 27—Cheverly Public School, 1 p. m.; Colmar Manor Municipal Building, 7:45 p. m.; Mount Rainier Municipal Building, 8:30 p. m.; Clinton, B. K. Miller's Store, 7 p. m.; Boulevard Heights Fire Department, 7:30 p. m.; District Heights, Shady Oak Inn, 9:30 p. m.

State Geologist To Be Moved to College Park

Removal of the office of the State geologist and the geological and economic survey to the University of Maryland at College Park, December 1, has been approved by the college board of regents, Dr. H. C. Byrd, president of the college, said last night.

The State officials will be brought by the move into closer relation with the laboratory of the Federal Bureau of Mines at College Park, Dr. Byrd said. The change is a step toward building up a stronger department of geology at the university.

Dr. Byrd said there are no plans at present for making any changes in personnel either in the geology department or in the Department of Forestry, removal of which to College Park had been announced previously.

"We have the highest estem for Dr. Mathews and Dean Berry," Dr. Byrd said.

Dr. E. B. Mathews, professor emeritus of geology at Johns Hopkins University, has been State geologist since 1917 and has been associated with the office since 1898. Dean E. W. Berry is assistant geologist.

Maryland University has no full professor of geology at present and it is understood that it is hoped to have a full professor who also would be State geologist at a salary of $4,500 a year and a second professor, who also would be superintendent of the State Geological Survey, at $3,000 a year.

O'Conor Road Beauty Plan Wins Backing

Annapolis, Oct. 23 (AP).—Telegrams and letters from all parts of the State flood Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor's office, commending his advocacy of a legislative program to preserve and protect roadside beauty in Maryland.

Mrs. Harry P. Slack, president of the Garden Clubs of Maryland, was among the first to telegraph the Governor approving his stand.

O'Conor said there was widespread sentiment for statutes regulating signboards and the commercial use of land along State roads.

The question recently came to a head in Anne Arundel County when county commissioners found existing laws impotent to prevent commercial exploitation of property along the new Gov. Ritchie highway.

So long as prospective builders comply with laws respecting public health and safety, the county commissioners must issue building permits. Permits have already been issued for an open-air theater, a truck depot-garage and two filling stations along the new Ritchie road, and more are in prospect.

Circuit Judge Ridgely P. Melvin this month charged the October grand jury with the duty of inquiring into the "trend toward commercialization of land along highways, to determine if existing laws are adequate, and to suggest law changes for legislative action if present laws were held insufficient to prevent defacement and commercialization of highways.

Re. and Mrs. A. H. Thompson Celebrate Golden Wedding Day at Methodist Home

Fifty-five years ago he was throwing his saddlebaks over a horse and setting off through wooded Montgomery County as a Methodist circuit rider. Last night the Rev. Arthur H. Thompson, still erect and lively, stood under a gilded bell beside his wife as they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary.

At the Methodist Home for the Aged, where they have lived for six years, the Rev. and Mrs. Thompson held two receptions, afternoon and evening, for crowds of friends including some whom he had baptized or married in his Washington pastorates.

As for his own wedding, the Rev. Mr. Thompson had this to say: "Our marriage was made in heaven and it didn't get mixed up coming down."

Their only child, Edwin I. Thompson, Texas oil man, had journeyed from his home at Houston to help them celebrate. His mother has been getting ready for this celebration since early last summer when she started making by hand the 300 wisteria blossoms, decorating the bower where they stood last night.

The joys and sacrifice of a minister's career, which started 60 years ago and in which his wife has shared for 50 years, formed the theme of the friends' reminiscences.

One friend who appeared had a hand in the romance. Miss Neva Gilbert, now of Baltimore, in whose Havre de Grace home the Rev. and Mrs. Thompson first met, came over specially for the celebration.

Although they had lived only a few blocks apart in Baltimore, they did not know each other until the young preacher Thompson was invited to dinner at the home where some young ladies were visiting. One of them was Miss Madge Gamble, destined to become Mrs. Thompson. He is now 80 and she 73.

After pastorates at Baltimore and Kensington, the Thompsons came to Washington about the turn of the century to Wilson Memorial Church. Later he was pastor for six and one-half years at Waugh Methodist Church, which sent a sizable delegation to the celebration. After 14 years in the West, they returned to Washington ten years ago, when he retired from the ministry.

When friends demanded the secret of a happy marriage, the Rev. Thompson declared, "mutual forbearance."

The son remarked that the Thompsons had got along so well together that "Senator Borah and Senator Pittman ought to see this example of neutrality."

Among anniversary gifts were an easy chair and ottoman, presented by Methodist ministers of this conference.

Utility Tax Bill Rises In Fairfax

Public Services To Pay $3,200 More This Year as Rate, Valuations Increase

Fairfax County's tax revenue from public service firms will be $3,200 more this year than last owing to a slight increase in the rate and higher assessed valuations, James U. Kincheloe, county commissioner of revenue, reported yesterday.

The total assessed value of property owned by public service corporations in the county this year is $3,031,516, as compared to $2,983,754 last year, Kincheloe said. Taxes from this source will amount to $86,045. In 1938, the public service corporations paid $62,810.

Railroads continue to top the list, with the Southern holdings assessed at $752,970 on which the tax will be $15,248. The Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad is second with an assessed valuation of $720,370, and a tax bill of $14,675.

Kincheloe's report shows the Virginia Public Service Co., which supplies electric current to most of the county, will pay taxes of $3,035 on a $420,418 assessment. Other major taxpayers include Virginia Gas Transmission Corporation, Alexandria Water Co., and Potomac Telephone Co. of Virginia.

The State corporation commission also granted applications of the Railway Express Agency, Inc., for authority to discontinue its agencies at Paeonian Springs and Sterling.

An application of the Cakkey Railroad to discontinue its agency at Mount Crawford, scheduled to be heard today, was postponed until November 1.

Fight Widens On Bond Issue At Arlington

Chamber Opposes Establishment of County-Owned Light And Power Plant

The Arlington Chamber of Commerce last night called for defeat of the proposal to issue $1,475,000 in bonds for establishment of a county owned light and power distribution system.

The plan will be submitted to the voters in a referendum on election day, November 7. It is supported by the county Federation of Citizens Associations.

The chamber took its stand on the controversial question—the main issue of the current campaign—by accepting its public utilities' committee's report, which unanimously disapproved the bond issue.

Plan Called Unsound

The eight-page report, submitted by Committee Chairman William Stone, bitterly condemned Government competition with private industry, termed the proposal financially unsound and warned it may result in increased taxes and cripple the more "fundamental" functions of the county government such as providing schools, public parks, playgrounds, storm sewers and sidewalks.

In regard to the question of whether a municipality or other political subdivision should go into the electric light and power business, the committee's report contended "that the proper and natural functions of government in a democratic state do not include the engagement in business such as the business of manufacturing or marketing of electrical energy.

"If such an invasion of the field of private business can be justified at all in any specific instance," the report said, "it must be on the ground of urgent public necessity.

Present Rate Termed Fair

"We do not believe that such a necessity exists in our county. On the basis of available comparative figures no community in the State enjoys rates as low as those of Braddock Light & Power Co., which serves a part of this county, and none has a regular scale of rates lower than that of Virginia Public Service Co., which serves the major part of this county. This takes into account some 15 municipally owned plants in the State. The fact that the Virginia Public Service Co. has made eight reductions in the last five years indicates that the trend of rates has been consistently downward."

The report asserted the survey of the engineering firm of Wiley & Wilson, on which the estimate of $1,475,000 was based, took place almost two years ago, and that since then the cost of building materials has advanced. In addition, the committee's report cited the lack of any provision in the survey for a source of power.

If it became necessary to build a steam generating plant to furnish power, the report said it would cost the taxpayers an additional $1,600,000, thus bringing the total outlay for the county-owned power system to $3,075,000

See Additional Borrowing

In this event, it was pointed out the bond issue would be insufficient and additional borrowing would be necessary.

A further objection to the survey as a basis for reckoning the feasibility of the power distribution system, the report stated, was that it was made on the assumption there would be no competition.

"Now it seems certain that there will be competition, and that a county-owned system will not enjoy a monopoly," the report averred. "Intimations from existing private concerns are that they will not willingly relinquish the field, and it does not seem reasonable to suppose that the courts will sanction the acquisition through condemnation proceedings of the plants of companies already satisfactorily furnishing electric service at the lowest rates in the State."

Other arguments against establishment of the county-owned power system, the report added, were that there was no definite assurance that it could profitably distribute current at cheaper rates than are now in force, and that duplication of power poles would be "undesirable, inconvenient and unsightly."

Alexandria Pushes Drive On Numbers

Man, 2 Women, Boy Of 14 Arrested in Campaign Waged By 4 Officers

Intensifying their drive against the numbers racket, Alexandria police yesterday arrested a man, two women, and a boy in a midday raid in 1200 block King street northwest.

The boy, only 14, was said by police to have been used by his mother as a messenger, delivering numbers slips and receipts to patrons. The mother was arrested on a charge of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. The youth was charged with antinumbers law violation and released on summons.

Two Freed on Bond

The other two suspects were an elderly couple, charged with operating a numbers game and possession of numbers slips. They were released on $1,000 bond. The four must appear in police court today.

Earle C. Jackson, 34, colored, is scheduled for trial this morning on numbers charges and faces a sentence of 90 days in jail or $300 for third offense. She was arrested Saturday.

The Alexandria drive is being conducted by Sergt. Padgett and Patrolmen Peacher, Embrey and Baber.

Job Distribution Assistance Asked

The Alexandria office of the Virginia State Employment Service yesterday called on skilled building construction mechanics to keep in close contact with the office to aid distribution of work.

Carter W. Friend, manager of the office, which serves employers and workers in Alexandria, Arlington, Fairfax and Prince William counties, without charge, said contractors often called for extra mechanics on short notice. Through failure of the mechanics to keep in touch with the office, Friend said, several requests were unfilled last week.

He suggested that the mechanics—bricklayers, carpenters, electricians, painters, plasterers, plumbers, steamfitters, lathers, cement finishers, machine operators—visit or telephone the office each day they are not employed, and to telephone or write when starting on a new job.

Notre Dame Is Second In AP Poll

Jock Sutherland Calls Vols One of 'Greatest I Have Ever Seen;' Michigan Third

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 23.—Tennessee's Volunteers, hailed by Jock Sutherland as "one of the most perfect football machines I ever have seen," today rode high, wide and handsome into first place in the Associated Press national ranking poll.

A week ago, in the first poll, the experts apparently were withholding final decision on Tennessee until its game with Alabama. But the Vols' 21-0 defeat of the Crimson Tide obviously furnished the clincher, for 83 of this week's 118 ballots gave first place to Tennessee, while the Southern eleven was ranked second on 15 others, and third on 8 more.

That gave the Vols, unbeaten in 17 straight games, a total of 1,077 points out of a possible 1,180 for one of the biggest landslides in the history of the poll. It also boosted them up from fifth place past Notre Dame, Oklahoma and Tulane while, at the same time, Pitt's 21-13 beating by Duquesne dropped the Panthers from the lead down into eighteenth place.

A Great Outfit

Sutherland told today's session of the Metropolitan Football Writers Association that he didn't think there was a team in the country that even could score on Tennessee, let alone beat them. If there is any team that could, the experts feel it would be Notre Dame, for they kept the Irish, winners of four major games this season, in second place with 841 points.

All of the 25 first-place votes that didn't go to Tennessee were distributed among the other teams in the top ten. Notre Dame got 12; Michigan, up from sixth place to third, got 8; Ohio State moved from tenth to fourth, 5; Texas A. and M., from ninth to fifth, 6; Oklahoma, dropped from third to sixth, 2; Cornell, from twelfth to seventh, 1, and Tulane, down from fourth to ninth, 1. Southern California won eighth place and Nebraska tenth without a first-place vote.

SECOND TEN: Duquesne, 117; Duke, 114; North Carolina, 111; Mississippi, 84; Oregon State, 67; Pennsylvania, 63; Southern Methodist, 49; Pittsburgh, 33; New York U., 25; Alabama, 17.

ALSO RAN: U. C. L. A., 14; Louisiana State, 13; Kentucky, 12; Purdue and Oregon, 11 each; Yale, 8; Minnesota and Dartmouth, 5 each; California, 4; Carnegie Tech, 3; Utah, 2; St. Mary's, Texas Christian, Catholic U., Santa Clara and Gonzaga, 1 each.

Pitt's fall was even more abrupt than Tennessee's rise. The Panthers wound up with only 33 points, and seven places behind their conquerors of last Saturday, Duquesne. Besides Pitt, the only team to drop out of the top ten was Alabama, while the vacancies they left were taken over by Cornell and Nebraska.

The poll substantiates the feeling that Ohio State-Cornell at Columbus should be this week's "big game," since it will bring together two of the select group. Neither has been either beaten or tied. Tennessee, which gets a breather with Mercer this week; Notre Dame, which takes on Carnegie Tech; Michigan, matched with Yale, and Texas Aggies, taking on a tartar in Baylor, also have clean slates.

Oklahoma, Southern California and Tulane crash the first ten despite ties on their records. The Sooners play Oklahoma A. and M., Missouri Valley conference leaders, this week-end, while the Trojans, idle last Saturday, meet California and Tulane meets Mississippi, unbeaten, untied and in fourteenth place.

'Biscuit Due At Tanforan For Comeback

By the United Press

San Mateo, Calif., Oct. 23.—Seabiscuit, handicap king of 1938, is scheduled to arrive at Tanforan race track tomorrow for the first step of a comeback which Owner C. S. Howard hopes will lead to victory in the 1940 Santa Anita Handicap.

The 6-year-old horse, second richest money earner of all time, will begin galloping at the Tanforan oval as the first move in returning him to training. He went out of the last Santa Anita with a strained suspensory ligament about three weaks before the race and has not been in training since.

The Howard stable reported the Biscuit in top shape. The injured foreleg is healed and the horse is only 30 pounds overweight. If he responds satisfactorily, he is expected to start in a race during the Tanforan meeting which opens on November 14.

Myersville Soccer Team Wins Opener

Emmitsburg, Md., Oct. 23.—A smooth working Myersville eleven proved too effective for Emmitsburg in the season's opener of the Shipley Soccer League of Frederick County here yesterday, and won, 5 to 0. The South Mountain team drove through three field goals in the first half and added two more in the final. Myersville outclassed its opponents in pass work, keeping the ball in Emmitsburg's territory most of the time.

Roar Winner Of Laurel Race; Brings $11.30

Prairie Dogs Grabs Second Money; Last Message Runs Third

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Oct. 23.—Carrying 115 pounds, mostly in the person of Jockey Alfred Robertson, Mrs. Charles S. Bromley's Roar turned on some sizzling speed here this afternoon to win the fifth and best race of the Monday program. The 4-year-old gelding, which had only one previous victory this year to show for some extensive campaigning, drove to the imaginary wire a full length in advance of Mrs. Emil Denemark's Prairie Dog, with Jockey Charlie Kurtsinger in the saddle. Third money went to the Tall Tree Stable's Last Message, a length and a half from second money and a neck in front of the Dixiana Stable's Irish Setter.

Roar Pays $11.30

Roar had a lukewarm following in the totalizator and paid his backers an $11.30 mutuel. He was clocked in 1:13 1-5 over a track that was as fast as it ever will be at the meeting. With good weather prevailing, a fine early-week crowd of 7,000 was in the stands.

Jockey Robertson appeared to outfox the veteran Kurtsinger in the 6-furlong sprint. Irish Setter set the early pace, but was supplanted by Roar as the field left the back stretch. Kurtsinger was riding confidently aboard Prairie Dog and had the Denemark Stable hope in on the rail. As Roar approached the stretch, Kurtsinger seemed to be waiting for the gelding to go wide, as has been his habit. However, Robertson stuck to the rail, forcing Kurtsinger to go out for his move.

Wallace Is Injured

Apprentice Jockey George Wallace escaped serious injuries, but was forced to cancel his last two mounts just before the seventh race. The Detroit boy was pinned under his mount, Lady Solace, when the filly went in the air at the gate and fell back. He was taken to the track hospital and Jockey V. Polk replaced him in the race. Wallace suffered a sprained left leg and a general shaking up, but said he would ride tomorrow.

Lady Solace finished in seventh position in a field of nine in the race, which was won by E. K. Bryson's Conville, a $15.90 shot, ridden by Jockey Pat Ryan. Fair Rock was second and Yackawanna was third. In all, the field was at the post for 15 minutes. While Lady Solace was being sent to the paddock for a new

New Yorker Scores Early In 5th Round

Spangler Wins Over Ed Finazzio Pearce Beats Drear In Co-Feature

Jim Howell, 240-pound New York colored fighter, blasted the hopes of Al Hart, statuesque Army War College product, into virtual oblivion last night in Turner's Arena by knocking him out in 28 seconds of the fifth round of their scheduled eight-round bout.

Howell halted Hart's knockout march down the local cauliflower lane with a series of sizzling left hooks into the Army boy's right short ribs that sent him to the canvas thre times for the count of nine in the fourth round.

Hart, a mere stripling of 217 pounds, was facing his first real test in the local ring, and his failure to come through apeared to arouse quite a bit of sympathy from Howell.

The roly-poly graduate of Joe Louis' training camp walked across the ring at the finish and pityingly patted the fallen Hart on the shoulder.

Hart's exhibition proved conclusively the reports that he can not take punishment to the midsection. Hart has the physique and muscles usually seen only in strong men advertisements, but he folded completely under the roughhouse body blows swung by Howell.

Throughout the battle, Howell clowned and urged Hart to mix it up. Then, after growling at the Washington colored hope two or three times, he opened up with the killing attack—which consisted of a simple left hook to the body.

A scanty 870 paying guests saw the business, and the gate was $1,063.

Badly outclassed by a more rugged and experienced fighter, Eddie Finazzo, 155½, the baby of Baltimore's fighting Finazzo family, dropped a six-round decision to Joey Spangler, 146½, of Richmond, in the semifinal. Spangler's vicious swings had Eddie backing away the greater part of the fight and in trouble in the final two rounds.

In the night's cofeature eight-rounder, two rugbeaters identified as Irish Eddie Pearce, 160, and Eddie Drear, 169½, of Baltimore, continued the drab parade of Eddies with as colorless an exhibition of leather pushing as has been seen around these parts for sometime, which is saying quite a bit. Irish Eddie took a majority decision.

Al Gilbert, 159¼, of Washington, took a majority decision over Hunter Crostic, 155½, of Richmond, in the opening four-rounder. Crstic slipped to the floor in the opening round under a Gilbert deluge and the final bell caught him again on his knees.

Army Squad O.K. After Yale Game

West Point, N. Y., Oct. 23 (AP).—No injuries resulting from the Yale game were reported today as Army's football squad turned out to begin preparations for the Notre Dame encounter at New York November 4. Coach Bill Wood sent the first two teams into the gymnasium to see motion pictures of Saturday's game while the third and fourth teams scrimmaged. Wood also gave the squad some of the plays to be used against Notre Dame. The Cadets expect to take Urainus in stride next Saturday.

Citadel Buckles Down To Work for Richmond

Charleston, S. C., Oct. 23 (AP).—The Citadel Light Brigade knuckled back to work today as Coach Tatum Gressette started preparations for the Richmond game Saturday at Richmond.

Gressette reported no serious casualties and had only praise for the defensive work of Bob David and Buster Deschamps in the 7-13 loss last week to George Washington.

To Whom It May Concern:

There were times when, in their listlessness against the Pirates at Pittsburgh, the Redskins could not be described as purely coincidental . . . they resembled neither living persons or things . . . Joe Turner relinquished his boxing-promoting rights to Goldie Ahearn with the reservation that any return bout between Joey Archibald and Harry Jeffra in Washington would be promoted by Turner . . . who lost $1,000 in promoting the last affair between the pair . . . the Maryland University "M" Club, potent in college affairs, is prepared to resist any move to replace Frank Dobson as head coach . . . Australia's declaration of war forced Jimmy London to cancel a wrestling tour that would have netted him $100,000, he complains . . . he had reached Honolulu on his projected trip when war broke out . . . Dutch Leonard's knuckle ball and George Case's baserunning are featured highlights in the American League's new baseball film entitled "Touching All the Bases."

POVICH

Winners of the daily double at Laurel yesterday can consider themselves bilked by the vagaries of the mutuels . . . Bright Blue and Bright View which returned $48.70 as the winning daily double combination would have paid $127 as a straight $2 parlay . . . the Redskins are interested in Dave Smukler, the big fullback who quit the Eagles, and Coach Ray Flaherty will talk trade with the Eagles' owners any time the latter desires to talk trade . . . Henry Lamar, the former Western High School athlete who drew a $10,000 gate against Marty Gallagher in Silver Spring's only prize fight, is now scouting for the Harvard football team . . . Boston, which virtually ran the Redskins out of town, is now bidding $125,000 for Pittsburgh's pro football franchise . . . Pete Reilly, manager of Featherweight Pete Scalzo, was taking no chances with Venezuela's high altitude when he took Scalzo there to fight Simon Chavez . . . he took also a portable oxygen tank and clamped an inhalation device over his fighter's mouth between rounds.

Ted Williams Called Greatest '39 Rookie

Riverside Stadium operators have offered Joe Turner the boxing and wrestling rights to the arena seating 5,000 . . . the 15 per cent Turner received as rent for Turner's Arena for the last boxing show netted him more than any of his own boxing promotions of the past year . . . Secretary of War Woodring yesterday called off the Army's preparation for next summer's Olympic games in Finland a month after Finland itself had called off the games . . . winners averaged 22 points and losers averaged 6 in the pro league games Sunday which is one of the reasons pro football is bringing out the crowds . . . a Washington football coach yesterday described the right guard and the No. 1 blocking back as "the two men on a football team who do the most work. Pro teams should pay them accordingly."

"You made no mention of Al Simmons' six years in the Navy when you reviewed his career the other day," a correspondent writes . . . if Simmons spent six years in the Navy it must have been between the age of 12 and 18, because he joined the Aberdeen, N. Dak., club at the latter age . . . Joe DeMaggio's marriage to his widely-publicized fiancee will be timed with the release of her most important film . . . Buford Moore is none other than Terry Moore, star outfielder of the Cardinals . . . Jock Sutherland classes the 1939 Tennessee football team among the four greatest college teams he has ever seen . . . Duquesne did more to de-emphasize football at Pitt by beating the Panthers last Saturday than all of the loud proclamations of Pitt purists . . . President Hutchins, whose Chicago team took an 85-0 walloping from Michigan, was probably misunderstood when it was reported that he advocated 10-cent football . . . he may have said 2-cent football.

Bucky Harris Is D. C.'s No. 1 Grid Fan

Until Catholic University swamped West Virginia Wesleyan, 80 to 0, and became a point-a-minute team, Coach Dutch Bergman was calling his boys the point-a-century team . . . there may be good reason for the New York Giants' proficiency at the point after touchdown . . . Coach Steve Owen declares they spend more time practicing that play than any other . . . Wayland Becker, the Green Bay end, is one of the two pro league players who did not play college football . . . he graduated to the Packers from Green Bay's East High School . . . Coach Ray Flaherty, of the Redskins, doesn't condemn Pittsburgh for trading Sam Francis to Brooklyn for Boyd Brumbaugh . . . "I'd rather have Brumbaugh," says Flaherty cryptically . . . Challedon's turf triumphs have elevated his English-bred sire, Challenger II, to a high place among high-priced stud horses . . . Washington's No. 1 football fan is Bucky Harris who never misses a college or professional game within traveling distance.

Pat Comiskey, the Jersey Irishman who some day will fight Joe Louis, is matched with one Alex Youssem at Baltimore Thursday . . . an inspired press agent for the fight describes Youssem as "The Adolescent Assassin" . . . a Tennessee sports writer took an unkind rap at Alabama after the Crimson Tide's 21-0 defeat by Tennessee . . . "The greatest team in Tennessee history has not yet been tested," he wrote . . . Tuffy Leemans has never played more than 30 minutes of any game since joining the Giants, because Coach Steve Owen reasons a man has only so many minutes of pro football in his system . . . Georgetown players are calling Joe Plewak, 143-pound Bucknell guard, one of the toughest they have ever faced . . . Carl Hubbell was mailed a blank contract for 1940 by the Giants and inserted his own salary figures.

Girl Prognosticator Wins Post's Grid-Picking Contest

Margarite Owen Is First Woman Fan to Take Top Honors; Misses Only 2 Out of 15 Games

By predicting correctly the results in 13 out of the 15 collegiate football games listed in last week's issue of The Washington Post's grid selecting contest, Margarite Owen, of 1426 Twenty-third street northwest, became the first woman to take top honors since the contest began six weeks ago.

Twenty-two persons, with 12 correct responses, were tied, and all will receive a pair of tickets to the District's outstanding football attraction of the year, the game Saturday at Griffith Stadium between Georgetown and George Washington Universities.

Miss Owen picked winners in every game but the Tennessee-Alabama affair, which ended 21-0 for Tennessee, and the North Carolina-Tulane contest, which ended in a tie. Her choice was North Carolina. The 46 tickets to the lucky winners will be mailed out this week. The winners were:

Miss Margurite Owen, 1426 Twenty-first street northwest; Frank M. McGeary, jr., 6000 Thirteenth street northwest; Leon D. Frigillana, 115 E street southeast; Robert F. Horton, 3016 Tilden street northwest; Thomas H. Chapman, 52 Rhode Island avenue northeast; Dick Downey, 102 West Woodbine street, Chevy Chase, Md.; E. O. Barnes, 1602 Carey lane, Silver Spring, Md.; H. H. Bunchman, 1778 Pennsylvania avenue northwest; E. P. Dorner, 2600 South Sixteenth street, Arlington, Va.; Harold M. Seaman, 1715 West Virginia avenue northeast; Herbert F. Rowland, 1762 Rhodes street, Arlington, Va.; Jennie Eaton, 516 Jefferson street northwest; William R. Hoover, Thurmont, Md.; Louis Kreiger, 2439 Monroe street northeast; F. Grove, 2308 North Capitol street; C. P. Bogert, 616 North Lincoln street, Arlington, Va.; Miss Virginia Marx, 1136 Neal street northeast; Samuel L. Bertolet, Greenbelt, Md.; Fritz J. McMorrow, 2900 Connecticut avenue northwest; Larry Stilwell, 4302 Thirteenth place northeast; A. J. Connors, 1778 Pennsylvania avenue northwest; Jose M. Homs, 3816 Seventh street northwest; L. Rinaldi, 1405 H street northwest.

As The Post's contest enters its sixth week, a list of 16 college games is presented to challenge the forecasting ability of football fans. Again five pairs of tickets await the winners—this time, tickets to the Georgetown-West Virginia game Saturday, November 4, in Griffith Stadium.

Just check your choice and do not fill in the scores unless you think you feel in the mood. Send in only one entry to "The Contest Editor" of The Post before the deadline, Friday, October 27, and remember duplicate awards will be given in event of ties.

Punkin' Wood, Middy Star Out 4 Weeks

Leg Injury Will Keep Back on Sidelines Until Princeton Game

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Oct. 23.—Dr. C. R. (Rusty) Ball, team physician, put a crimp in Navy football hopes tonight when he announced Emmett (Punkin) Wood, injured powerhouse halfback, would be out at least until the Princeton game November 25.

Wood, whose knee was injured in the Dartmouth game, will be "promoted" to crutches tomorrow, Coach Swede Larson said, but he cannot possibly get in shape to play before the Tiger tussle.

Wood was the most powerful runner on a squad weak in its ground attack and also handled the kicking and passing.

Four Are Praised

Larson, reviewing the 14-7 game Navy dropped to Notre Dame Saturday, singled out four Midshipmen as outstanding in the defeat.

Larson said Bob Leonard's passing was superlative. He credited Dick Foster, pint-sized sub end, with smart and sparkling offensive play. Leonard-to-Foster passes were Navy's only reliable offensive

'Do-or-Die' Buckeyes Ready for Real War

By the Associated Press

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 23.—Ohio State University's gridders banished dissension, the coaching staff tossed a couple of sophomores into starting tackle berths and shuffled its strategy—and now the Bucks are riding high.

When unbeaten-untied Cornell invades Columbus Saturday, it will meet a team that little resembles the 1938 Buckeye squad.

The personnel is practically the same as last year's club which won only four of eight contests, but a new "one-for-all, and all-for-one" spirit has helped the current combine defeat Missouri, Northwestern and Minnesota.

Voted Selves Grid Title

Andrako, following Hull's success with the same tactics, called his squad together at the start of the season and the boys voted themselves the Big Ten grid crown. They also decided to iron out all player disputes before the squad, with the coaches barred, and to "police" the training of each other.

On the field, Andrako is the boss. Five times he has motioned back to the bench substitutes sent into frays by Coach Francis A. Schmidt. And Schmidt like it.

"He knows conditions out there on the field better than I do."

Ernie Godfrey, line coach, summed it up:

"In Scott, Strausbaugh, Langhurst and Zadworney we have a great and versatile backfield, probably one of the best all-around combinations in the country. Sarkkinen is an outstanding end, and our sophomore tackles have come through. But I believe the team's fine spirit is the big factor in our three victories. That 'one-for-all' element is the thing that's been giving us the best blocking we've had in years."

Razzle-Dazzle Out

The famed razzle-dazzle of Coach Schmidt has been side-tracked, too. Against Missouri the boys mixed up passes and plunges. Not a pass was completed as Northwestern was swept aside, but three aerials went for touchdowns against Minnesota. That gives Cornell a three-way guess.

The new "college try" at Ohio is paying dividends at the gate. Missouri drew 58,165 fans here, and Northwestern followed with 55,622. At Minnesota the gate was 53,000, boosting the 43-game attendance under Schmidt to 1,968,527 for an average of 46,068, despite several games at Chicago, Indiana and Illinois where customers ranged from 5,000 to 15,000.

'10-Cent' Grid Advocate Stuns Squad

ROBERT M. HUTCHINS

Chicago, Oct. 23 (AP).—University of Chicago football players disclosed today that President Robert M. Hutchins, an advocate of "ten-cent" football, visited the team's dressing quarters after Saturday's 85-0 rout at the hands of Michigan.

They quoted his as saying, in effect, "Don't let the final score bother you. You did well today."

"We were all to amazed by his appearance to remember very much of what he said," one player explained. "We just stood there gaping in amazement."

Head Coach Clark Shaughnessy said Dr. Hutchins' visit was "one of the best things that could have happened to the squad."

He added he planned to reorganize the team between now and their next game with the Univrsity of Virginia November 4. The Maroons injuries and immediately went to work to prepare for the intersectional clash.

Is Hartnett Facing a 'Slow Death?'

Fans Wonder if Club Owner Is Using This Method to 'Fire' Him

By George Kirksey,

United Press Staff Writer.

New York, Oct. 23.—The rumblings and the grumblings out Chicago way have the baseball world wondering if P. K. Wrigley, millionaire owner of the Cubs, has adopted the "slow death" method to get rid of the one-time Happy Warrior, Gabby Hartnett, as manager of his ball club.

So far as the records go Wrigley has neiher fired nor re-hired Hartnett, but the handwriting on the wall clearly indicates that Gabby's number is definitely up. The latest bulletin from Michigan boulevard is that Wrigley has asked Hartnett to submit to hi ma program for reviving the Cubs in 1940.

This may be Wrigley's way of asking Hartnett to wield the axe on himself. Wrigley, who now regrets that he acted hastily in dismissing Charlie Grimm in midseason of 1938, might be content to give Hartnett another year in which to break his own neck.

Whatever program Hartnett submits to Wrigley it would seem to have small chance of success if some of the undercurrent stories

OWNER WRIGLEY

Handwriting on Wall Visible; Manager's Contract Withheld

as a scrapper and hustler on the field is not nearly so dynamic and fiery as the team's leader. They tell this story to illustrate Hartnett's lack of leadership. The Cubs were trailing by a good-sized margin one day last summer when one of the Chicago players, chattering from the bench, yelled:

Boss Hartnett looked at him in disdain and muttered, "Yeh, by next Christmas."

That one stopped the chatter on the Cubs' bench that day.

Since Larry French had the nerve to appeal to Wrigley over Hartnett's head for a chance to pitch, several other Cubs have paid calls on the millionaire owner. Whether Wrigley invited these players to talk with him or whether they did so of their own accord is anybody's guess.

But Wrigley has been finding out a few things, some of which he didn't bargain for. One player who has had more than a little experience in the majors is said to have told Wrigley that the Cubs were the poorest-run ball club he ever played on in the majors or minors.

connected with the Cubs are even half true. About half the ballplayers on the Cubs are for Hartnett and about half against him.

The anti-Hartnett group claims that the florid-faced Irishman who made such an enviable reputation

Ties Mark Medal Rounds in Publinks Turkey Tourneys

146 Compete In Muny Play At 3 Courses

Morris and Phenix Tie at East Potomac; Wilhelm and Wolford Even at Rock Creek

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Turkey tourney time on the public links finds 146 golfers starting match play rounds today in the tournaments over three courses, 60 at East Potomac, 46 at Anacostia and 40 at Rock Creek.

Qualifying rounds were concluded yesterday, with medal honors divided. W. W. Seay was lowest at Anacostia, a three-under par 65, but Manager Harry Graham will hold a playoff between the four low scorers, Seay, John Keogh and Fred Kroeger, with 67s, and Calvin Loving, a 68, to determine the medalist's prize.

Tommy Doerer, jr., drew the biggest entry at East Potomac where Bob Morris, city championship finalist last year, and P. R. (Lefty) Pheni deadlocked for the medal with 72. Their will be no playoff as Anacostia is the only course awarding a bird to the medalist.

Albert (Kaiser) Wilhelm, one of Rock Creek's top linksmen, and C. L. Wolford tied for qualifying honors over the uptown layout, with three over-part 70s.

The players have until next Sunday to complete the first round, with a round a wek scheduled. November 19 is the final date for the finals in all flights in all three tourneys.

F. L. McAlveavey and B. A. Bickerton were the only other players to better 77 in Cleve Miller's Rock Creek tourney, posting 73s. Don Stone was third low scorer at East Potomac with a 73, while Serge Folk had 74, Gerard Edwards 74 and John Andestead 75. Courtney Litz, with 69; L. V. Byers and George Graham, with 72s, were other low scorers at Anacostia.

Seay, the comedalist at Anacostia, is also after the East Potomac event, a tourney he won last year. Anne Dolan, one of the leading women golfers on the publinks, is playing in two tourneys, qualifying at East Potomac with a 95 and Anacostia with an 88.

Charlotte Hall's Coach Is Worried About Injuries

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlotte Hall, Md., Oct. 23.—Frankly pleased by the unexpectedly strong showing his team made on Saturday against Georgetown Prep, but also worried by further injuries to an already depleted squad, Coach Shel Ehringer sent the Charlotte Hall Military Academy football squad through a light drill today in preparation for its "traditional battle" Friday against the St. Mary's Academy, of Leonardtown, Md.

Ehringer expressed himself as being highly gratified by the showing of an underdog Cadet team, which outplayed the Little Hoya eleven for the balance of Saturday's game, only to drop a 13-0 decision by virtue of a 97-yard run off an intercepted Charlotte Hall pass and the completion of a 50-yard "sleeper" pass.

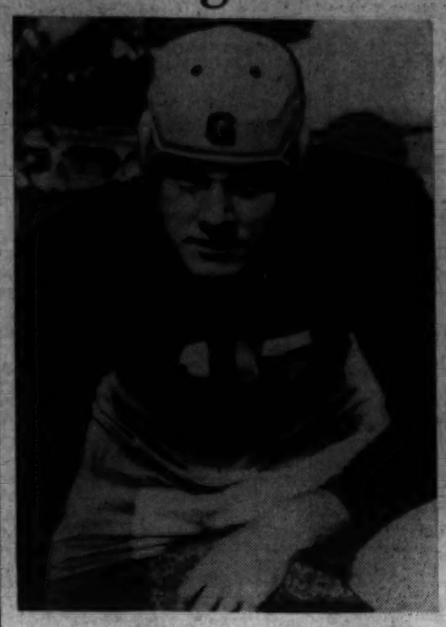
Richardson and Daly, Foes in '34, Rivals Again in Colonial-Hoya Tilt



"REDS" DALY

BILLY RICHARDSON

Former Central, Tech Grid Aces Oppose As End and Back

The time: About 2:40 Saturday afternoon. The place: Griffith Stadium. The occasion: The first football game in 16 years between George Washington and Georgetown.

The public address announcer cries excitedly: "It's Billy Richardson in the tailback for George Washington. He's going around end, he's getting away . . . but no, Reds Daly comes in fast for Georgetown, makes a smashing tackle and prevents a long gain."

And many fans in the stands will turn back their mental calendars to 1934, when Daly was a star end for Tech High School and the stubby Richardson was blasting opposing lines for Central, Tech's bitterest rival.

Yesterday Daly was recalling his high school days, thinking of the lush era when the Tech-Central grid rivalry was the hottest thing in town, when six or seven thousand students literally fought to get into Central Stadium whenever the teams played. Also he was remembering Richardson as "one of the gamest players I ever saw."

"Billy and Central beat our 1933 Tech team, 6-0," he smiled ruefully, "but if memory serves me correctly we came back in 1934 to trim 'em, 45-0. Billy was a blocking back in those days and what a back he was!

"He could do everything there was to be doen on a football field, and do it well. If he's as good Saturday for George Washington as he was in 1933 and 1934 for Central against Tech, then Georgetown'll have plenty of trouble.

Probably neither Richardson nor Daly will be in the starting line-ups when G. U. and G. W. come to grips, but both are certain to be in ere the first half end. Daily purposely was rested by Coach Hagerty Saturday as Georgetown nipped troublesome Bucknell, but now he apparently is recovered from the shoulder injury which had kept him idle since the opener with Temple.

In proper shape, Daly yields little in ability to any end around, but his greatest trouble seems to be in eluding an injury jinx which has kept him from Georgetown's regular line-up most of two seasons. Rugged and fast and probably Georgetown's best pass receiver, Daly is rated second only to G. W.'s Bob Nowaskey and C. U.'s Louis Shine when good ends are discussed in authoritative circles.

He played only the latter part of the 1938 season, but turned in a fine exhibition of football in Georgetown's concluding two games especially against Maryland. His good nature is exceeded only by his fiery competitive spirit and when any player has that combination he makes an inspirational leader. That, in short, explains how sad Coach Jack Hagerty has been the past few weeks when Daly was going about with his arm in a sling, and the dya when the team was leaving for the Syracuse game and Daly tearfully refused a chance to go because he "wouldn't have been able to put out."

Compared in size to Daly, Richardson is a near antithesis. Only about 5-foot-8, he could stand under Daly's arm-pit and his 150 pounds look slight against the bulk of the 200-pound Daly. But in the will to win and in sheer unadulterated spunk, Richardson and Daly are twins.

Strangely and omniously—for Georgetown—Richardson has played but little of G. W.'s three games to date, although last Friday against The Citadel he impressed this observor as the Colonials' best running back. In one G. W. drive he carried the ball five times and picked up no less than 5 yards on any try.

Undeniably the Colonials' most accurate passer, Richardson, when "hot," can be a potent package of dynamite. Whatever the reason for his brief appearances to date, Richardson probably will give a splendid account of himself against Georgetown. S'matter of fact, if you're looking for a G. W. back who might outshine all others, don't overlook little Billy Richardson.

Lions' Spearhead Out for 4 Weeks

New York, Oct. 23 (AP).—Les Stanczyk, spearhead of the Columbia football attack, probably will be lost to the squad for four weeks, Coach Lou Little said today.

He suffered a broken nose in the Princeton game Saturday. His place will be taken by Bill Naylor. Columbia plays V. M. I. here Saturday.

For three years broken noses have bothered Columbia's ace backs. The past two years Sid Luckman was the victim.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Oct. 23.—George Halas, coach of the Chicago Bears, is blazing some kind of a new trail in his handling of Sid Luckman, the Columbia boy who wasted considerable fragrance last year on the desert air around Baker Field.

The common practice in pro ball is to commercialize the publicized college rookies as much and as soon as possible, set up plays for them and in other ways exploit them on the field—with more of an eye to the box office than you'd suspect. Example: Half-baked, half-pint Davey O'Brien.

CONSIDINE

Halas is doing it differently. He is going to round out Sid's football education before he fully unveils him. Now a fellow who has even lived on the same block as Lou Little for four years, much less played under him, absorbs a terrific amount of football knowledge. But Luckman has many things to learn, in the postgraduate league, and Halas is going to see that he learns them.

Halas' plan is to make Luckman into a quarterback around whom he can build teams for the next five years. No matter how smart a college football player is, he can't step into a job as quarterback on a Halas team. A pro rookie, for all his collegiate record, just doesn't know enough.

Halas is going to put Luckman through a full year's apprenticeship. For the most part he will be an unsung blocking halfback, until he has soaked up enough pro guile to fit him for the tough quarterbacking duties, which, on Halas' team, means calling the plays, doing the passing and much of the running. When Luckman does get the job, he should be the best-trained and best-instructed young guy in the history of the pro game.

High-Salaried Rookies Pain to Veterans

A lot of the high-salaried rookies who have come into pro ball in the past few years have been extremely unpopular among the older blokes on the club. That's not hard to understand. If you were a football pro who was coming to the end of your playing career, and had to protect some bungling neophyte who made five or ten times as much money as you, you'd be sore, too. But the old Bears have taken a strong liking to Luckman. Jack Manders, for one, has spent hours with him, teaching him the little tricks which would take him years to master if he had to learn them on his own. Luckman's humble manner, and the genuine hero worship which shines in his brown eyes whenever he looks at one of the older guys, have made them all for him.

Halas is content that Luckman, when finally moved over to quarterback, will be the greatest back in the game. That is the main reason why he has turned down Dan Topping's record offer to buy Sid and bring him back to his native Brooklyn. Luckman is Halas' special project and protege. Halas was the first pro coach to take an interest in him. Saw him in a drab Columbia-Syracuse game and was immediately sold on him. He changed Sid's mind when Luckman decided not to play pro ball. He engineered a complicated deal with Pittsburgh to get him, for the Pirates had first drafting rights to him. Sid went to him the other day and asked him if he were going to sell him, and Halas told the player that he would stay with the Bears for life.

Pimlico Special Takes on New Color

The Pimlico Special, which looked like a forlorn overnighter a couple weeks ago, with the withdrawal of Johnstown and Eight Thirty, has picked up considerable steam as a result of the victories of Kayak II and Challedon in feature races at Jamaica and Laurel Saturday. The 3-year-old championship already belongs to Challedon, and Kayak's early victories on the Coast would make him the handicap king—so the race will come as close to deciding the 1939 oat-eating champ as is humanly possible in these matters.

Kayak' II's time was slow in taking the Continental Handicap. Challedon, though not hard pressed, dusted a mile and a quarter at Laurel in 2:02-3-5, only three-fifths back of the track record. Both carried 128 pounds, but Kayak II will hoist the heavier load when they meet at Vanderbilt's little hoofing party November 1. The colts are remarkably matched so far as earnings are concerned. Challedon now leads all horses in training with winnings of $174,535. Kayak II has earned $161,025. Pimlico's pari-mutuel machines will accept straight bets only, when those two toe the line.

Get-Together Today Closes Women's Golf

Teams to Compete at Indian Spring, Manor In Season's Finale

The annual fall get-together for the team members of the District Women's Golf Association will bring the official 1939 season to a close today, with the first team members competing at Indian Spring and the second and third teams at Manor.

Post entries for the event will be accepted, and nearly 150 are expected to compete over the two courses. Any member of a team in the spring interclub matches is eligible.

The contestants will all gather at Manor for luncheon, prize presentation and the official awarding of the team trophies.

Entries close tomorrow for the N. B. C. tourney, an invitation affair Friday at Army and Navy. Mrs. J. S. Phillips is accepting the entries of all local women golfers, with handicaps, at Chestnut 7500. The deadline is 1 p. m. Players are requested to bring their own caddies.

The intercity team will seek better than an even break for the season tomorrow, meeting Baltimore's 12 best linkswomen over the Hillendale course. Mrs. J. F. Dowdall's team holds a previous victory over the Baltimoreans, but lost to Philadelphia.

Gonzaga U. Coach Says School May Abandon Football

Spokane, Wash., Oct. 23 (AP).—Claude McGrath, athletic director at Gonzaga University, said today football might be abandoned at the institution next year because of financial losses.

McGrath said "the school's athletic board doesn't see how it will be possible to continue football at Gonzaga next year with gate receipts, general expenditure and overhead as they are."

The board met last Saturday.

Gonzaga's eight-game schedule this year involves more than 10,000 miles of travel with only two games in Spokane.

Gun Club to Restock Creek Near Security

Hagerstown, Oct. 21.—The North American Rod and Gun Club of Security, near this city, announced that it will restock Antietam Creek with big mouth bass this fall. This stream, a tributary of the Potomac River, ranked as one of the best bass streams in Maryland a quarter of a century ago, but pollution killed off most of the game fish.

G. W. Practice Field Secluded as 14th & F

Curious Riders on Bridle Path, Spectators Mingle With Players at Polo Field; Team And Reinhart Confident of Victory Over G. U.

By Jack Munhall.

At the risk of life and limb your intrepid correspondent yesterday bolted through a curious group of horsemen on the bridle path encircling the Potomac Park Polo Field, vaulted an 8-inch fence, brushed aside a cluster of startled Georgetown scouts and took a look at George Washington's young football men as they prepared for Saturday's big game.

It was amazing. After taking a peek at Georgetown's practice field, with its shroudlike canvas cover and forbidding appearance of utter secrecy, which cannot be penetrated except by Congressional permission, you cannot help comparing G. W.'s site to Grand Central Station.

In the center of the field was the varsity team which, come Saturday, will take Griffith Stadium field as a lowly underdog against the Hoyas, who ride the giddy heights of two undefeated seasons. At one end was the freshmen, who are so big they could probably spot the varsity a couple of touchdowns. Among the players strode little Bill Reinhart and big Botchey Koch, the coaches, in their inimitable costumes—Reinhart bundled to his ears in a heavy blue sweatshirt, thick white stockings and the hat he has worn since the Civil War; Koch sporting an unharmonious symphony of buff and blue.

Spectators See All

Spectators walked through and around the players, ducking forward passes, standing so close to the players they could ave counted the hairs on the heads of Art and Bob Nowaskey, G. W.'s twin ads for the tonic that restores your curly locks.

The players themselves were skipping about as full of life and pep as a herd of colts. They looked anything but like the squad of unknowing youngsters who in a few days would be sacrificed on the altar of the great god Gridiron to appease Georgetown's wrath at a recent tie by Syracuse which spoiled a ten-game winning streak.

This, you thought, cannot be the George Washington team which barely got by poor, little Citadel Friday night and which dropped the duke to unheard of Butler. But there they were laughing and joking as they ran through passing plays and took passing swipes at blocking dummies.

Colonials Overdue

"Huh?" said Head Coach Reinhart, "why should we be worried? It's really just another ball game and we believe we have a good chance. I know what the fans must be thinking after the Butler and Citadel games. And they're right. We certainly weren't impressive, though in each case we decisively outplayed the other fellows.

"That's the big thing about this Georgetown game. We're overdue to click on all cylinders. Whereas Georgetown has had to open up in every game except Roanoke, we haven't. Not even against Butler, when we lost."

That's all very well, Mr. Reinhart, but come tell us who is going to win the Georgetown-George Washington football game. Let's get down to business.

It'll Be Close

"Who's going to win," snorted little William, "you don't think we're preparing to lose, I hope? On past form, Georgetown figures to win by two or three touchdowns but they won't. We're going to win, and I believe it'll be very close."

Mr. Botchey Koch, who hails from way down there in the Texas cow country where men are silent, went out on the limb and even told just what type of game George Washington would use against Georgetown.

"Ssh!," he said, "this ain't for publication but between you and me we'll play an offensive game when we have the ball and a defensive game when they have it."

Turner Imports Another 'Champ' For Grunt Show

An old Greco-Roman wrestling gentleman, Hans Kampfer, claimant of the championship of Europe and the Island of Crete, will make his local debut, along with Frank Brunowicz, Polish groan artist, Thursday night in Turners' arena, when the third installment of the Jack Hader-Don Evans feud will be run off.

For this latest Hader-Evans piece a two-out-of-three-fall rule will prevail, Promoter Joe Turner announced yesterday, adding that it is the first time the rule will have been used in six years. In one of the supporting matches, Abe Coleman, Polish villain, will waltz with Eddie Newman, who gave up pro football for the wrestling ring.

Speed to Spare Wins by Neck in New Rochelle Handicap

Basil James Boots Home 18-to-5 Shot

Straight Lead Is Place Winner; Show Won by Preeminent At Empire City

By the Associated Press

Empire City, N. Y., Oct. 23.—Running right back to his recent Jamaica score in the Interborough Handicap, Speed to Spar had just enough left to win the New Rochelle Handicap as the final fortnight of New York racing began before a well bundled-up crowd of 8,000 here this afternoon.

The 6-year-old son of Balko, one of the horses acquired from A. G. Vanderbilt by the Circle M Ranch of Mrs. E. S. Moore, Wyoming sportswoman, lasted to take the $4,825 major share of the purse by a neck under Basil James. Mrs. Parker Corning's Straight Lead, a slight favorite over the victor, was second, a length and a half in advance of Isidore Bieber's slow-starting Preeminent.

Speed to Spare closed at 18 to 5 in the open betting affair and stepped the distance of about 6 furlongs in 1:08 4-5.

Don Mike opened favorite but receded to 4 to 1. He ran a dull race, winding up next to last in the field of eight speedy sprinters. Straight Lead was held at 7 to 2. It was his first start since he finished fifth after showing early speed in the rich Hopeful Stakes at Saratoga. Fans remembered how he made his debut at this track last July and scored in a romp like a coming champion.

Speed to Spare, as is his wont, rushed into a daylight lead, making War Dog quit as the field turned for home. Straight Lead, which had been only a head behind War Dog, made his challenge in the straight run to the wire. He cut the winner's lead from three lengths to less than a half length at the wire. Preeminent nosed out War Dog, with T. M. Dorsett, Try Hard, Don Mike and Sir Marlboro bringing up the rear in that order.

Know the Jockeys—V

Apprentice Jockey George Wallace—

While many jockeys are products of farms and ranches where they learned to ride horses at an early age, George is one boy who never had a leg over a horse until he set out to become a race rider. It took a heap of happenings to get him in the saddle. Michigan's legislation had to pass a racing bill, a track had to be built at Detroit and George had to find his way to the track. He was born and partially raised over on the otherside of the border at Toronto, Canada, but his family later moved to Detroit. It was less than two years ago that Wallace, ambitious to wear silks, was boosted aboard a horse early one morning to be led around. Gradually he got the feel of the saddle and it wasn't olng before he was working horses. The Gulf Stream Park track, at Miami, Fla., proved a costly venture to its promoters and they probably tear their hair everytime they think of it. The track was open only a few days and young Wallace has a kindly feeling toward it. At the new track, came this new rider. On February 4 of this year, that is eight months ago, George rode his first winner. From that success to the present he has been gaining momentum in his chosen profession. It was only last week that he moved into the "big dough" when the Milky Way Farms, owned by Mrs. Ethel V. Mars, bought his contract. A natural lightweight, George weighs only 102 pounds and he is 18 years old.

JOCKEY WALLACE

Detroit is still his home town. He still needs a bit of polish in the sadde art, but horsemen believe that he is the type who can carry on when he loses the 5-pound allowance that goes with his apprenticeship.

Gonzaga High Golf Team Intact for Year

The identical team which carried Gonzaga High's golf banner last season will be in harness again next spring when interschool competition begins, it was announced yesterday.

A qualifying round of 18 holes found George Beuchert, last year's No. 1 player, again best with a 76. Other members are Charles Cullen, No. 2; James Fitzgerald, No. 3; George Rita, No. 4; Morgan Quinn, No. 5, and George D

Cards Favored Over Miami

Team Leaves Tomorrow For Florida

Southern Eleven No 'Push-Over' for D.C. Squad; Return of Guyon Bolsters Team

Rolling along serenely toward the first perfect football season in Catholic University history, Dutch Bergman's big, bad Cardinals leave tomorrow afternoon for Miami to keep a Friday night engagement with Miami niversity.

Unbeaten and extended only by Detroit in four games, in which they amassed 120 points, the Cardinals will rule a good favorite over the Southerners, but they are hardly overconfident. Miami, since its opening-game walloping by powerful Wake Forest, has developed into a pretty fair sort of football team; one not to be taken too lightly by any foe.

Two weeks ago the Hurricane blew over its neighboring and red-hot rival, Tampa College by 32-7, with a convincing display of power and then last Saturday it knocked over Rollins, another tough little club, 14-6. By comparative scores which, as often proved mean but little, Miami shapes up better than Florida, which was good enough to upset Boston College. Florida was able to defeat Tampa by one touchdown, 7-0.

The C. U. squad, at improved strength following the return of Joe Guyon, a flashy halfback who missed last week's game with West Virginia Wesleyan and also the Detroit game the week before, with stomach trouble, apparently is all right now.

With Guyon ready to go in a backfield which also can include Rocco Pirro and Frank Krawczel, who shares the District individual scoring lead with four touchdowns, C. U. is assured of a dangerous running attack, an attack that has averaged 30 points a game and which rolled up nine touchdowns against West Virginia Wesleyan.

Miami Team Shows Form in Workout

Miami, Fla., Oct. 23 (AP).—The University of Miami team showed such fine form in a general workout today that its mentors felt a surge of confidence regarding Friday night's game with Catholic University of Washington.

Varsity men did well in all branches of the game, and Carl Jones, aided by smart downfield blocking, got away on one dazzling touchdown dash.

Stan Raski and Jimmy Poore, regular tackles who have seen only a few minutes of play this season because of colds, were back in the scrimmage and perked up line play considerably. The squad also was in fine mental shape.

weapon against the Ramblers.

Monty Whitehead's kicking, the Swede reported, pulled Navy out of some bad holes. Lou Mayo, the coach said, hit the heights against the South Benders to emerge with a personal triumph. His defensive work was particularly notable, Larson said.

Larson said the squad was considerably "banged up" after the bruising encounter, but none of the bumps were serious.

Larson, still dissatisfied with the team's blocking and tackling, kept the Tars at "live bait" tackling practice through the session tonight.

Regulars who played at Cleveland were excused from contact work, but will be in the thick of it when Larson preps his offensive for the game with Clemson Saturday. Navy coaches figure the Clemson game as one of the toughest on the schedule.

Iowa Loses Walker, Big End, Rest of Year

Iowa City, Iowa, Oct. 23 (AP).—Jim Walker, 205-pound Negro sophomore from South Bend, Ind., will be out of football for the remainder of the season as the result of a knee injury suffered in the Michigan-Iowa game October 14.

Henry Luebcke, a guard who underwent a hernia operation recently, was released from the hospital Saturday, but will be unable to play again this fall.

Virginia Points For W. & M. Game Saturday

Cavaliers Snap Back After V.M.I. Upset, Look For Battle in Norfolk

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlottesville, Oct. 23.—University of Virginia coaches today started pointing for Saturday's clash with William and Mary at Norfolk, which shapes up as a major objective for the Cavaliers.

The squad emerged from last week's rugged encounter with V. M. I. in fairly good condition and may be able to muster more strength this week than last, all of which is figured to be needed.

Some of the cripples are expected to be ready by game time Saturday, particularly the two tackles, Lee McLaughlin and Albert Frerotte, who were in little more than half of the V. M. I. game. Also, Mosby Cardozo, backfield regular, who was held out altogether, is due to return to the active list.

Virginia moves up to the middle-of-the-schedule game with an even break to date, winning from Hampden-Sydney and Maryland and losing to Navy and V. M. I., while William and Mary had two victories, a tie, and a lone defeat from Navy. The Indians showed up with a 26-to-0 margin over Hampden-Sydney last week, duplicating the earlier showing the Cavaliers made against the Tigers.

Costly lapses which cropped out again last Saturday were pointed out to the squad today. A pass interception and V. M. I.'s one completed pass, all in less than two minutes, and the Cadets had two touchdowns. Otherwise the statistics gave Virginia nearly every advantage except enough points.

Coach Frank Murray's team for this year, however, has already won distinction as having the best "kick-back" of any Virginia eleven within recent memory. Lagging at every turn, they almost overtook Navy, and had to score two quick touchdowns in the final period to finish ahead of Maryland.

Clemson Grid Game Head's Navy Program

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 23.—A football game with Clemson here next Saturday heads the week's sports card.

On Wednesday, plebe soccer makes its start for the season, and on Friday, the B Squad eleven meets the B's of Pittsburgh in the former's second game of the present season, having neatly disposed of Princeton B last Friday.

The football game with Clemson will be the lone star locally on Saturday, but Navy teams will take part in three events away from Annapolis.

At New York, with Columbia and Princeton as additional entrants, Navy and Army will meet in a cross-country match which will be the first of 13 contests in which teams of the service academies will meet during the year.

Every chance favors Army, according to Earl Thompson, the Navy coach. The Soldiers claim to have their best team this season, while the Navy is somewhat below its standard.

The Navy will have entries in the Boston Challenge Cup Races for dinghies Saturday at Cambridge, Mass., while the soccer team goes to New Haven to boot against Yale.

Ticket Seekers To G.U.-G.W. Game Jam Agencies

The mad rush to procure tickets to the Georgetown-George Washington football game continued yesterday, giving further assurance that the attraction will be attended by upward of 25,000 fans.

Tickets, priced at $1.10, $1.65 and $2.20, may be obtained at the athletic departments of both schools, at Spalding's, the American Automobile Association, and at Griffith Stadium, site of the game.

Georgetown Will Honor 'Hap' Hardell

Testimonial Is Set For Friday; Trophy To Be Presented

Georgetown University, following the lead of Tech High School, will participate in Friday afternoon's testimonial to its freshman coach, Elmer (Hap) Hardell, as Hardell's team meets cubs from George Washington at Griffith Stadium.

Georgetown now is preparing a scroll of signatures of all freshmen and varsity gridmen and will present it together with a trophy to the popular Hardell, who always will be remembered as the greatest track and football coach Tech ever had.

The G. U. award will be made to Hardell through Francis (Reds) Daly, varsity end, who played on one of Hardell's last football teams at Tech.

Tech students yesterday were busy affixing their names to an attractive scroll to indications are that a fine representation of students and former McKinley athletes coached by Hardell will be present for the game.

Just as Saturday's varsity meeting between George Washington and Georgetown promises to draw the biggest crowd ever to see a varsity college game here, the freshman battle Friday should set a corresponding record.

Clemson Cadet Corp May See Colonial Game

Gov. Maybank Of South Carolina Expected to Attend

If the plans of the local Clemson Alumni Association materialize then the Clemson-George Washington football game at Griffith Stadium Friday night, November 3, will be a big event.

At their monthly dinner meeting at Naylor's last night about 100 alumni revealed through President Haskell Allison their plans which include the presence at the game of Gov. and Mrs. Burnette R. Maybank, of South Carolina, and the entire Clemson Cadet Corps, to the number of 2,000. The Clemson College president, E. W. Sykes, also is expected to attend. Among the cadets will be lemson's famed senior platoon of 90.

Among those present at the meeting last night were Judge Allan R. Johnson, of the Federal Works Agency, and former football players Willard Hart, '16 and '17; Warren R. Clardy, '04; Edgar Morris, '08, and L. T. Slattery, manager, '04.

A Clemson alumni dance is scheduled for the night of Saturday, November 4, at the Shoreham Hotel and Gov. and Mrs. Maybank have been invited.

Clemson, one of the strongest teams in the South, plays at Navy Saturday and is conceded at least an even chance of upsetting the Middies.

Clemson, Oct. 23.—The Clemson Tiger goes up against a different kind of football "animal" this weekend and the game with Navy's "goat" will be among the highlights of Eastern football Saturday.

Emerging uninjured from its 27 to 0 victory over the University of South Carolina last Thursday, Clemson prepares for its fifth game of the season with a record to date of victories over Presbyterian College, 18 to 0; North Carolina State, 25 to 6, and South Carolina. The Tigers suffered their only defeat by a 7 to 6 score at the hands of powerful Tulane University.

Uncle Sam's Midshipmen are faced with the task of halting the most unpredictable football team in Clemson's history. It is a Tiger team fairly dripping with color, a team that takes chances and, as a result, a team that is about as close to a four-ring gridiron circus as football teams ever are.

The sudden fury with which Clemson's offense is striking this year has enabled the Bengals to register an even dozen touchdowns to two for the opposition. The Tigers scored four times against South Carolina and the pay-off plays offer a fair idea of how Coach Jess Neely has his boys working: Banks McFadden swept 20 yards for the first; Bru Trexler lateraled to Chippy Maness for the second and then, after a 23-yard run, Trexler lateraled to George Floyed who went on 13 more yards for the fourth. Aubrey Rion scored the third touchdown on a 9-yard run.

Coach Oakes Of Colorado Retains Post

By the Associated Press

Boulder, Colo., Oct. 21.—President Robert L. Stearns of the University of Colorado said today Bernard F. (Bunny) Oakes would remain as head football coach for the remainder of his contract, which expires in January, 1943.

"It is the policy of the university to keep its engagements," said the recently appointed president.

The board of regents yesterday extended Oakes and "other members of the athletic department" a vote of confidence, following published reports the university's athletic board had decided to ask the regents to seek Oakes' resignation.

Oakes became coach in 1935.

After three defeats C. U. scored its first victory of the season Saturday, beating Colorado State, 13 to 0.

Washington Team Wins Cast Event

Hagerstown, Oct. 23.—The Washington Isaac Walton League casting team won first leg on the John Pangborn trophy in the tournament held here yesterday at Pangborn Park. H. A. Vermule, Washington, won first prize in the open class; W. G. Reynolds, Washington, second; E. H. Listerman, Washington, third. In the Pangborn trophy event, the National Capital team finished second, Hagerstown third. The novice class tourney was dominated by members of the North American Rod & Gun Club, Ben Trovinger, Jack Thomas and Dr. R. M. Hill.

Heavy Clothes For 80,000 Refugees Asked

Red Cross Announces Drive to Aid Poles Forced From Country

The American Red Cross yesterday announced opening of a campaign to provide heavy clothing for Polish refugees and receipt of a check for $1,000 from the Jewish B'nai B'rith for impartial war relief in Europe.

A list of clothing needs of more than 80,000 Poles in Latvia, Hungary, Lithuania and Rumania was received at headquarters from the American Red Cross delegation in Europe, Chairman Norman H. Davis stated.

The program calls for 83,000 heavy dresses of outing flannel, wool rayon or woolen materials, and 137,000 heavy sweaters to be produced before January 1. The Red Cross already has purchased 30,000 suits of heavy underwear, 10,000 pairs of shoes and 5,000 blankets, the announcement stated. Distribution will be supervised by the International Red Cross Committee at Geneva through Red Cross societies of the four nations harboring the refugees.

The $1,000 check from B'nai B'rith was presented by Maurice Bisgyer, national secretary of the organization, to Eliot Wadsworth, vice chairman of the Red Cross advisory committee on relief. Bisgyer said the funds had been allotted from the national emergency fund of B'nai B'rith by the executive committee in keeping with the organization's 50-year policy of impartial relief in emergencies.

Chicago Wheat Closes Lower After EarlyRise

Selling Comes From Spreaders Apparently Buying at Other Marts

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 23.—After an early display of strength had added as much as ⅝ cent to quotations, wheat prices tumbled more than a cent from the highs today and closed fractionally lower than Saturday.

Selling came from spreaders who apparently were buying wheat at other markets and from dealers influenced by the unsettled securities market and the disappointing failure of buying power here to expand as much as they thought unfavorable crop reports from the winter wheat belt warranted.

Minneapolis and Kansas City wheat closed unchanged to only slightly lower than Saturday. Traders had anticipated some support for Chicago wheat through lifting of hedges against Government purchasing of flour for relief distribution, but only small buying here was credited to mills. At Kansas City, however, mill buying was reported substantial. Thomson and McKinnon, grain house, had a report indicating that possibly 730,000 barrels of Government flour had been booked, with orders scattered among many millers.

Chicago wheat closed ⅛-⅞ lower than Saturday, December 84⅝-84¾, May 84¼-84⅜; corn unchanged to ⅛ higher, December 49⅜-49¼, May, 52-52⅛; oats unchanged to ¼ down; rye ⅛-1⅛ down and lard 13-23 lower.

July wheat, which closed at 82⅞-83, compared with 67¼-67⅛ a year ago, showed the most strength. This contract represents the 1940 crop, which, according to experts, is off to an unusually poor start, due to drought. Some experts compared the current situation with that of the fall of 1932, when seeding was late. The crop sown then produced only 376,000,000 bushels, one of the smallest harvests in years.

Offsetting the crop picture, however, was the fact that domestic export business has declined sharply, while world trade in wheat has been cut in half since the war.

Corn prices were off about ½ cent early in the day, but the market rallied a full cent from the low point. Hedging pressure was light despite receipt of 413 cars and the cash market displayed more strength while country selling diminished. Rye weakened with wheat. Good commercial demand supported soy beans, which closed unchanged to ¾ higher despite heavy receipts in excess of 600 cars. Lard declined in sympathy with hogs and cottonseed oil.

Nearby Cotton Futures Close Slightly Higher

New York, Oct. 23 (AP).—Nearby cotton future deliveries displayed the most vigor today when hedging sales increased. This was offset by sustained demand from trade interests. Closing prices were 6 points lower to 4 higher.

Transferring of hedges from near months forward accounted for a good portion of the activity. Most traders appeared none too anxious to extend themselves in view of the claims and counter-claims arising from hostilities abroad. The same time textile news offered little to warrant new market action.

Demand from Bombay and Liverpool dried up after the opening flurry was satisfied and from then on trading was largely a routine affair.

Cottonseed Oil

The cottonseed oil futures market turned in one of the smallest score cards for sales in months today. Total dealings amounted to only 14 contracts.

The market dropped 6 to 7 points in line with weakness in hogs and lard. Most traders were content to wait for Europe to furnish another price cue.

December ended 6.78 bid; March, 6.98; May, 7.06.

Scattered sales of crude oil were reported in the valley at 5¾ cents. The Southwest and valley both bid that at the finish and Texas, 5.50@5.70.

France Places New Order for Trucks

New York, Oct. 23 (AP).—The French government was disclosed today by an authoritative source to have placed a new order for 1,500 to 2,000 motor trucks with the White Motor Co.

This is in addition to an order for 2,000 trucks placed last Friday with Studebaker Corporation. The final number of White trucks to be shipped depends upon how many the company can deliver before January 1.

L. C. Smith Expects Further Increase

New York, Oct. 23.—With its sales volume thus far in 1939 exceeding that for the same period in 1938, L. C. Smith & Corona Typewriters, Inc., expects that its typewriter business will continue to follow the rising trend of business in the United States and that new foreign outlets, particularly in South America, will offset any decline in European business, Hurlbut W. Smith, president of the company, said today.

"Reports on general business conditions throughout the United States show that the curve is going up," said Smith. "The typewriter business has always shown a close correlation with general business, because an increase in business necessarily means an increase in office work."

The Market

By C. Norman Stabler
A Special Correspondent.

Indecision Keeps Traders on Fence List Rather Ragged at Close Speculative Rails Give Ground

New York, Oct. 23.—Indecision kept traders on the fence again today although some brokers insisted selective buying was going on among well informed professionals. The list, however, presented rather a ragged appearance at the close. Steels were soft, which may have reflected disappointment at failure of the operating rate to show another rise as indicated by Saturday's news. Speculative rails also gave ground and oils were inclined to ease. Store stocks, however, extended their recent advances and motors, rail equipments, coppers, utilities and the independent aircraft sections held steady. Five of the fifteen most active issues of the day were shares selling from $4 to $10.

The composite for the 100 big board stocks ended 0.12 point down, a fractionally higher opening being succeeded by a lower drift and narrow price movements for the balance of the session. Sales were 973,890 shares. United States Treasuries and foreign issues were higher in a quiet bond market. Foreign exchanges fluctuated narrowly. Wheat advanced early but reacted to close ⅛ to ⅞ cent lower. Cotton was 4 points up to 6 down.

The aviations and motor truck stocks figuring in last week's flurry were strong at the start and several, including North American and Curtiss-Wright, established new highs before the reaction set in. Curtiss-Wright opened on 10,000 shares. Meanwhile official announcement came that the French overnment had placed a second large order for motor trucks in this country, with White Motor said to be the principal beneficiary. White, Diamond T, Mack trucks and Studebaker established new tops. The motor group generally responded and for a time seemed likely to make progress. Hayes Body, which recently announced it would add aircraft accessories to its manufacturing line, remained in the most active list, but closed unchanged at 4.

Utilities in Demand

Utilities took over the leadership from air and truck stocks for a brief interval with Consolidated Edison retaining a good part of its improvement. Columbia Gas, Commonwealth Edison, Engineers Public Service and Stone & Webster were others in demand.

Nash Kelvinator led the list on 27,800 shares, closing at 8 for a net rise of ¾ on announcement that orders on the company's books are the largest in ten years. Checker Cab was at a new high. In an irregular chemical group, Allied Chemical was off 1¾. Telephone lost a point. Du Pont 1¼ and Steel common 1⅛. Sears Roebuck spurted more than a point as directors authorized payment of a $1.25 extra. Loew's firmed 1⅜ and Eastman Kodak finished 2½ points higher.

While action of the share markets reflected lack of conviction on the part of traders concerning the war situation and possibly the outcome of the neutrality controversy in Congress, it was apparent that Anglo-French interests are making plans for large purchases of machines and materials in this country. Numbers of bombing and pursuit aircraft, some of which are ready for delivery, and the more recent motor truck orders are not the only examples of the Allies' intentions. Heavy tonnages of semifinished steel, and orders for marine motors, army tanks and a variety of other battle equipment are said to be merely awaiting a signal from Congress for definite order.

Plant Changes Planned

In addition to these orders in sight, numbers of the small industrial companies are rumored to have started, or are contemplating plant changes which would permit them to share in business of a purely war type. Expenditures for changeovers would, in some cases, be substantial.

Speculations on the war phase of the market—which continues its principal force—received little encouragement from today's news from the other side. American correspondents in the Maginot and Siegfried lines found the fighting much less exciting than they had expected. Stress was again placed upon the importance of diplomatic moves now in progress, particularly those centering about Balkan countries.

Treasury Bonds Firm

A generally firmer tone in Treasury bonds and in a number of foreign obligations was the best feature of a small bond market today. Total turnover on the stock exchange amounted to $6,340,000, against $7,668,000 on Friday, the last previous full trading day.

The average of 30 bonds was up 0.09 point on the day, 10 rains were off 0.14 point, speculative rails up 0.14; industrials up 0.19 and utilities up 0.34.

Both on the exchange and in the over the counter market prices of treasuries were generally above Saturday. The late list showing gains up to 7-32 point. Foreign liens showed gains up to 3 points or more in fairly active dealings as the market sought to interpret week-end developments abroad. Australian issues, the Scandinavian countries and isolated bonds elsewhere shared in the rise. Canadas were firm.

In the rail section, Baltimore & Ohio and some of the Lehigh Valley list were under pressure. Southern Railway general 6½s were strong and New York Central issues moved irregularly.

Rails to Show Revenue Gain, Institute Says

Freight Car Loadings Increase of 11.3% Forecast for 1939

New York, Oct. 23.—The present outlook is that the annual operating revenues of the railroads in 1939 will be considerably larger than in 1938, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. In the first place, the Shippers' Board's forecast of loadings in the fourth quarter indicates that freight car loadings for the full year will be 11.3 per cent larger than in 1938. In the second place, returns available so far indicate that the level of freight rates this year will be 3.2 per cent higher than last year.

On the basis of these indicated gains for loadings and freight rates, the railroads' operating revenues in 1939 will total $4,094,000,000 as compared with $3,565,000,000 in 1938. Operating revenues this year will thus be higher than in any year since 1930, with the exception of 1931 and 1937. At the same time, revenues this year will be far below the pre-depression level in 1929, when revenues amounted to $6,280,000,000.

On the basis of returns so far, the prospect is that the increase in operating expenses this year over 1938 will be only half as large as the increase in operating revenues. Consequently, it may be estimated that operating income after the payment of taxes will amount to $681,000,000 this year as compared with $373,000,000 last year. The prospective operating income this year will thus be more than sufficient to meet interest charges.

The outlook is that the railroads will report a profit of $185,000,000 this year in contrast to the deficit of $123,000,000 last year. The railroads will thus make a better showing in 1939 than in any previous year since 1930. However, the showing will be poor as compared with pre-depression returns. In 1929 the railroads reported a profit of $897,000,000.

Display Ad Volume Decreases Slightly

Chicago, Oct. 23.—Volume of display advertising placed by retailers in the newspapers of 79 important markets declined slightly from last year during the week ended October 14, according to a summary released today by Advertising Age, national advertising newspaper.

During the week the total volume of advertising placed by retailers in all the newspapers of reporting cities was 21,262,233 lines, compared with 21,740,398 lines during the corresponding week of 1938, a decline of 2.2 per cent. Despite this decline, cumulative 1939 lineage is running ahead of last year by a margin of 1.7 per cent.

Commercial Loans Dip $2,000,000 in Week

Commercial, industrial and agricultural loans of banks declined slightly in the last week, after eight consecutive weekly increases which added $376,000 to the business loan portfolios of banks in 101 leading cities.

In the week ended October 18, banks in these cities reduced their commercial loans by $2,000,000, bringing the total down to $4,288,000,000, which was still $386,000,000 more than a year ago.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Not even a super expert would dare to claim ten tricks at a heart contract on the North-South cards of today's hand. But Sigmund Spaeth, chairman of the National Association for American Composers and Conductors, who would never essay the title of bridge expert, managed it.

With five losers in his hand, he contrived to eat two of them to win the bid. Naturally, he was greatly aided by the defense.

His letter:

"Vulnerable as we were, my attempted shut-out in third position may have been a little optimistic. But I felt I might be keeping the opposition out of the game and I was a hundred honors to the good, and we were almost in town, so why not take a chance?

"On my left was my favorite opponent, Howard Herney. My partner's overcall of the club overcall worried me plenty, but luckily it was not doubled on my right, so I just naturally went overboard for game and rubber.

"When dummy went down, after a club opening, I had visions of a 500-point set losing three spades, a club and a diamond. But I said my prayers and hoped for the best.

"The king of clubs held, and Howard naturally led a trump, which the jack took in my hand. I could immediately trump my losing club, but that would still leave four losers. So I made the bold play of leading the singleton diamond up to the dummy, feeling that the ace might stay off for one round, which it did. The diamond return was trumped and ace fell. Now all I needed was to drop two spade honors together. My losing club was trumped in dummy, and another diamond trumped high, after which two rounds of hearts were run. On the first spade lead the queen went up and East could not show the king. So after trumping the next club lead, I tried the spade again, and it worked, ace and king falling together."

Chapter 21

The young man felt this scrutiny, looked away, blinked, took off his glasses, rubbed his eyes and asked very simply, evidently wishing to be answered, "Was it always like this?" He put his glasses on. He looked like any other young American.

"Why, how could it have changed?"

Canby drew a long breath. "Aren't boys the brute beasts that perish?" he said, turning away from the window. "I don't see how anybody stands them long enough to let them grow up. I don't see how you ever stood me for four years, damned if I do."

TIMOTHY was touched. He put his arm around Canby's shoulder and gave him an affectionate reassuring shake, saying in the dry cool local vernacular but with a warm accent of liking, "You weren't hard to stand, Canby. You were a nice boy. As nice as any I ever saw. And I've seen lots."

The young man gave him a look he never forgot; the clear brown eyes, very close to his now, softened into an expression almost appealing. He breathed deeply, he said with feeling, "Oh, Uncle Tim . . ." made a grimace with his lips, shook his head and turned away, silent.

They walked together out to the hall closet where the wraps were kept. Timothy was thinking sympathetically, "Well, of course, to have thought you were settled in life, with a home and a wife and a steady job—to break away from all that, no matter how loudly he talks about being glad of it—it must be something of a jolt."

Canby got down on his knees and began to rummage on the floor of the closet among the overshoes, rubbers, and skates.

"And yet," thought Timothy, much experience and many misunderstandings having forced him to recognize the total opacity of human beings, "there may be something else he hasn't told me. There may have been another woman he wanted and couldn't get." Or he might find himself moved by no more than the emotion—Timothy had never decided whether it was egotism or poetry—which he often saw in former students returning after an experience of active life to the scenes which reminded them that they had once been young.

"Jesus Christ!" cried Canby from the closet, irascibly, sitting back on his heels to pull a sliver out of his finger.

"See here, Can," said Timothy, "you might as well soft-pedal the profanity while you're out talking to Clifford people today. They usually leave it to the lumberjacks to use swear-words as ingredients, not as condiments." He feared he had sounded too uncle-like, and added, "Don't bother if it seems a nuisance to you. After all, since you're here for only one day . . ."

"Oh, it's no matter of principle with me, if that's what you mean. I've grown up a little!" He drew out a pair of overshoes, tried to pull one on, gave it up, and flung them back into the pile, talking over his shoulder, "Really, you know, Uncle Tim, that was one swell show, that sunrise. Think of that happening every morning—all the mornings I been rolling out of bed to look at a rain of soot falling through a soft-coal smokescreen."

"You mustn't think it happens here every morning," said Timothy reasonably. "When it's cloudy or dark—you know we have a good deal of detestable weather in December."

"Don't talk such damned pure Vermontese," said Canby, backing away from the closet with a pair of long felt socks in his hand. "I mean darned pure." He stood up. "Can I have these?"

Wearing Timothy's red and black windbreaker with the sheepskin collar turned up, Timothy's cap with the ear flaps pulled down, and mittens and lumberman's socks and pacs, and wishing plaintively that Aunt Lavinia would loan him a shawl, he went out as Timothy started up to his study to answer the personal letters which in termtime always piled up on his desk waiting till a so-called vacation allowed him to turn from one kind of work to another.

HE TOOK THE cover off his typewriter, looked at the keys, decided to clean them, decided it would take too long, and began to write. He wrote Jim Nye, of the class of 1922, now building a bridge in Brazil, that he strongly advised keeping the children there and having their mother teach them. Myra (she was of 1923) was a bright girl; she could do it all right; he would send down some notes and materials from the primary school. Anything would be better, he wrote as always, than separating young children from their parents. He wrote the textbook publishers in New York to keep that high-pressure salesman from coming again as she could under Prof. Kimball, he being the best man on that faculty. (He meant he was the only man with vitality exuberant enough perhaps to light a fire under Eliza.) Aching over the bald futility of words, he wrote the parents of Jim Hard a letter of condolence about Jim's death. He was called downstairs by a telephone from the janitor, who asked if Prof. Hulme wanted he should turn the water off from the domestic science room. "For heaven's sake, yes, Melville. You always do in a winter vacation. That should have been done the minute the fire went out in the range."

He went back up the two flights and wrote Molly Dean (of 1920) that her letter sounded to him as though she was bearing down too hard on her daughter. Bella was 15, wasn't she? She sounded to him about like most adolescent girls, he said, and took occasion to put in a discreet reminder to Molly of the time when he had had to drive off in a hurry after her and that worthless Moore boy and bring them back by the back road so that nobody would know. He re-read with lively interest and answered at some length Malcolm Craig's account of the psychological experiments going on in the laboratory where he was assistant, to see how many stimuli sheep could respond to without going to pieces nervously. "Neurotic sheep!" he smiled as he wrote, at the incongruity of the phrase. The telephone rang again. He toiled down to answer the call, thinking that he really must scrape up enough money to have an extension phone put into his third-story study. It was one of the Four-H children asking if he would buy tickets to their play.

Yet today the long climb back was sweet, for it gave him time to summon Susan to walk beside him. When he reached his study he did not go at once back to work. He went to the window and looked out unseeingly at the splendor of the sunlit valley, thinking with thanksgiving of his dear love. But the clock struck 11 and he hurried back to his desk. What, he wondered, reading over Myron Rudd's letter, was there to say to a bright idealistic kid who knew there was one answer to all questions, and that answer Communism? As he considered this, he noticed that Aunt Lavinia's music-machine below him was playing "The Sunken Cathedral." He stopped the weary tap-tap of his own machine for an instant to listen to the deep bells giving tongue through the surge of the ocean swell, and thought how at every sight or thought of Susan all the bells in his heart that had hung voiceless so long——

HE WOULD NEVER get through that pile if he stopped to dream. He finished the letter to Myron, he replied to the Reverend Mr. Randall's protest about the girls wearing skipants, that he thought it a great mistake to lay as much stress on a mere matter of changing fashion as on a question of real moral significance like the students forming cliques that excluded the less well-to-do. (Mr. Randall was the trustee who rather favored fraternities.)

He heard someone knocking on the front door, jumped down to open it, found Mrs. Foote there to tell him about a complaint the Parents Association had to make about the sliding hill used by the Primary School children. He disposed of her, went back to his typewriter and wrote the president of the Alumni Association that he was delighted to hear of the fund being raised but he would rather have a set of large modern maps for the Academy library than a new rug for the boy's sitting room. Boys didn't appreciate good-looking things around them, didn't, as a fact, really like them, and the Academy needed modern maps terribly. He pulled another letter to him, read it, thought for a moment, put sheet in the machine and began, "Dear Bud: I believe if I were you I would tell that girl . . ." when two stories below him a lunch bell rang. He sprang up so eagerly as to tip his chair over, and went downstairs as fast as his lame knee would let him, feeling himself nothing, all his personality shredded to the bits he had sealed up in one envelope after another.

Canby was there, his face reddened by the cold. "Nice, restful beginning of the vacation?" he asked ironically.

Timothy thought of the morning back of him and looked grim.

"You're the only man in the round world that still writes his own letters, Uncle Tim. For heck's sake, why don't you have a stenog?"

"You know why!" cried Timothy, exasperated.

"Aw, go on! Stenographers don't cost much."

"They cost something."

"Well, anyhow," said Canby, falling, sharp-toothed on his hash, "you'll be glad to know I stopped at the postoffice and brought you a nice big sheaf of letters."

"We are not amused," said Timothy, coldly.

Canby laughed. "Don't try to pull the martyr act on me. I know you always take time to read something you want to read before you go to bed. I've seen you at it!"

He said this nonchalantly, but with it went a warm glance from his brown eyes that was a reminder of his affectionate reminiscences of the night before. Timothy thought, surprised and pleased, "He really meant some of that, then."

The transformation—as once in a while you saw it—of a heedless, self-centered adolescent into a complete human being aware of help given him in youth and grateful for it—that was a miracle schoolteachers forgot, especially in those withering moments of self-doubt when their profession seems rather a bad joke. Perhaps, Timothy thought for the first time, all during his queer disjointed boyhood, Canby had been troubled by the rootless instability of his home life, more than his elders realized.

"Well, Canby, how did Clifford look to you?"

"Didn't look too bad," said Canby, deprecatingly, with a guarded flat intonation. He laughed then, his big irregular teeth glistening. "Just wanted to show you that you're not the only one that can talk Vermontese," he explained. "In New Yorkese, I like Clifford fine. Californianly speaking, I'm mad about it—absolutely mad." He fluttered his fingers at an invisible person and said, "Never mind, Mildred, now never mind."

"What in the world . . . ?" demanded Aunt Lavinia.

"Somebody I used to know," explained Canby, "would have asked me, 'What do you mean by Californianly speaking, Canby dear?'"

"Who'd you see this morning?" asked Timothy.

By the time Canby had named the people he had seen—it took him some time—three academy seniors had clumped into the hall in their ski boots, and were silently waiting in the living-room. "I'm going to show'm the wood-road over to Henley Pond," said Canby, wiping his mouth hurriedly and standing up from the table. "The poor fish've never been there."

"Where did you get skis?" called Timothy after him

CANBY PUT his head through the door. "I bought'm!" he said luxuriously. "I just went and bought'm down at Harvey and Sackett's Emporium. And boots. And poles. And a windbreaker of my own. And mittens. And a cap. And some red woolen underwear. I've got all the money in the world and nothing to do with it."

Aunt Lavinia cried, shocked, "But, Canby how silly to buy all that gear just for one day! You could have borrowed it."

"Scotch my Scotch!" said Canby impudently, thumbed his nose at her and vanished.

Aunt Lavinia laughed. Timothy did not. For an instant he felt a slight discomfort, almost like a sensory impression. He sent his mind scurrying to look into this, but it faded as suddenly as it had come.

The heavy front door was shut.

"Do ye hear that? He didn't slam it! He's really grown up," remarked Aunt Lavinia, "and ver-r-y much improved too. Who'd ha' believed that gawky green-apple of a lad would have made such an attractive man?"

Timothy, lighting a cigarette, said nothing.

Aunt Lavinia went on, speculating objectively, "Would anybody think now that there'd be a woman-feeling left in a person of my antiquity? But d'ye know, I quite feel Canby's vigorous masculinity."

Timothy took his cigarette out of his mouth and looked at her.

Amused by his expression, she explained, "Well, 'quite feel' is claiming too much, of course. What I really feel is that he's just another American barbarian. I mean I can understand how he'd make a young woman flutter."

Timothy drew on his cigarette thoughtfully, considering this. "Well, I like Canby," he said. "I always did like him. Better than you did, when he was a boy here. I agree with you that he's turning out rather well. But I shouldn't say he was good-looking at all. Rather commonplace and ordinary, with that undershot jaw and that nose. And spectacles!"

"Don't talk like an idiot," said Aunt Lavinia. "I never said he was good-looking. I said he is probably attractive to women. What have his looks got to do with that?" she explained, "I suppose what I mean is—why be an old woman if you can't tell the truth even if it's coarse?—that he's a full-grown vigorous male dans la fleur de l'age, and any woman within ten years of his age couldn't but feel that. You mark my words, he'll come back from this round-the-world cruise engaged. Married, perhaps."

To Be Continued.

Chrysler Aide Lauds District Auto Show

Special Events Being Scheduled Besides The Daily Programs

"One of the prettiest automobile shows I've seen this year," was the opinion voiced yesterday by C. L. Jacobson, vice president and general sales manager of the Chrysler Corporation of Detroit, after visiting the twentieth annual auto show at Riverside Stadium. Mr. Jacobson has visited most of the big shows now in progress and was most favorably impressed by the local exhibit.

An entirely new car, not for sale, and of which there are only two in the United States at present, will go on exhibition tonight. This car, known as Continental cabriolet, is built to conform to European practices and lines. Even the spare tires, mounted at the rear, has no tire cover, because that is the way it is done in Europe.

This new and striking different automobile will be shown tonight, tomorrow and Thursday only, after which it will be shipped to Philadelphia for exhibition. It is being brought in here specially for the show. It is the newest development of the 1940 Lincoln-Zephyr line.

Dealers and visitors alike yesterday were enthusiastic over the beauty of the show, which is conceded to be one of the best staged in recent years. Easy of access via Constitution avenue to Twenty-sixth street, between the Avenue and D street northwest, and one block east of River Drive, the 18 different makes of sleek, colorful 1940 cars, and the big exhibit of American Trailers, make this exhibit worth a visit.

A number of special events are being scheduled for the show in addition to the daily programs. Tonight, the candidates for "Queen" will be present and will be introduced from the stage. They will tell why they want to win a 1940 car, to be given the girl elected Queen by Saturday night.

In the race for Queen, Miss Margaret Rosalee Hackett, who has been working since the show opened, is still far in the lead. Ballots counted through Sunday night gave her 4,390 votes. Other leaders are Miss Sylvia Abramson, 1,455; Miss Sylvia Wilkinson, 1,425; Miss Ruth Brown, 1,300; Miss Catherine Barberich, 1,250; Miss Evangeline Rice, 1,240.

Manager Murphy yestreday called attention to the rule that makes ballots cast for any one except the listed candidates invalid.

Wedding Gown Show

The Wesleyan Service Guild of the Petworth Methodist Church will present "A Bride's Procession" tonight at the church auditorium. Authentic wedding gowns will be modeled by members of the guild and friends.

23 Skidoo! Kid—Take a Ride On the Wings of Memory

By Gerald G. Gross

The following prescription is recommended for anyone in the mood for a good old nostalgic spree, an interlude transporting you back to the days of "23 skidoo!" and "Say, will you look at that chicken!"—

If you can make your way safely through the streamlined sedans and speedy roadsters in downtown traffic, slip into the Smithsonian Institution's arts and industries building and enjoy a wallow o rfeverie in front of the automobile song sheet exhibit.

Gee, what memories those sheet music covers bring back:

Opening and closing garage doors for an uncle's 1916 Ford at a weekly stripend of 5 cents, same being used to finance attendance upon Pearl White serials . . . public amazement evoked by the Stanley steamer . . . the breath-taking elegance of the Winton six . . . . jacking up the car for the winter . . . the Klaxon horn.

The song title exhibit, lent to the Smithsonian by J. Francis Driscoll, of Brookline, Mass., will bring back such things to anyone at least 30 years old.

There they are: "I Didn't Raise My Ford to Be a Jitney" and "In My Merry Oldsmobile" and "Get Out and Get Under" and scores of other titles, their covers gaily illustrated with pretty girls in driving veils and handsome blades in dusters. They may look funny today but, doggone, they recall some happy old times.

Remember "Take a Little Ride With Me" (1906), which carried the subtitle: "A conversation, with music, between an automobilist and a dairy maid?" or "When He Wanted to Love Her, He'd Put Up the Cover," circa 1910?

Many of the song titles demonstrate the rivalry that existed two and three decades ago among the car manufacturers and their clients. Included in the Driscoll exhibit are "From Earth to Mar (sic) in a Jackson Car," "Ray and His Little Chevrolet," "Give Me a Spin in Your Mitchell, Bill," "Take Me Out in a Velie Car," "Overland Success," "The Cole 30 Flier" and scads of Ford songs.

The Ford Motor Co. published in 1908, a tune entitled simply "The Ford." The music cover is very proper, indeed, depicting a fair young woman out for a drive—with her pet collie.

In 1914 there came "The Little Ford Rambled Right Along" and in the following year were written "I Didn't Raise My Ford to Be a Jitney" and "The Love Story of the Packard and the Ford." The year 1921 brought "The Scandal of Little Lizzie Ford" and later there were "Hurrah for Henry," "Henry's Made a Lady Out of Lizzie," and others.

"Social Forces For and Against the Democratic Ideal" will be discussed by Eduard C. Lindeman, of the New York School of Social Work faculty, Thursday morning in the first of three lectures sponsored by the committee on volunteer service of the Council of Social Agencies.

The series will be given at the United States Chamber of Commerce Building at 11 a. m. each of three days.

West End Group To Stage Parade

The first annual parade of the West End Business Men's Association, featuring four bands and an advance appearance by Miss Winnie Porter, the Halloween celebration queen, will begin at 7:30 p. m. tomorrow at Eighteenth and K streets northwest.

The line of march will be from Eighteenth and K, west to Twentieth street, south on Twentieth to F, east on F to Seventeenth, north on Seventeenth to Pennsylvania avenue and west on Pennsylvania to Twenty-fifth street.
